Inside the Monkeyhouse

Tonight's Episode: Mayhem in Aisle 7

I want my freakin' toys!!

I'm sick of being disappointed every time I step into Toys R Us on the hunt for the latest action figures. No matter how many times those automatic doors shush apart, there's still that faint glimmer of hope that a Grand Hoff Tarkin or Gene Simmons figure will be there when I turn the corner down the action figure aisle. But nine times out of 10 I leave the store empty-handed. This is getting ridiculous.

It takes a good two to three months after the latest Star Wars or Spawn assortment has hit the stores for these figures to be readily available to everyone. I don't understand it. I was a good kid. I always say "please" and "thank you." I stay away from hard drugs and cheap women (well...most of the time). I never leave the toilet seat up. So why can't I find the toys I want? Is this my punishment for some heinous crime in a past life?

Somebody's gotta take the blame for this travesty and it sure as hell ain't toy enthusiasts (like myself) or harmless, innocent little kids. There definitely isn't a shortage of plastic in the world and I know for a fact that the toy companies are doing their best to get their product on the shelves. If there's one group at which the big finger o' blame can be pointed, it's all them damn speculators and dealers.

I'm sure you've heard people rant and rave about this before, but I want to add my two cents' worth. It all comes down to a simple truth: These new toys will never turn into a goldmine. All those figures that are worth a small fortune, like a removable mask Mega Robin or a plastic-caped Jawa, are expensive because very few of 'em exist. If everybody shoves a case of mint Admiral Ackbar figures in their closets, there still won't be any demand for them a year or two from now, because there'll be plenty available.

This means war. All those people who agree with me and just want to enjoy their action figures—rise up and take back the toy aisles. Spot a toy dealer ransacking the place and making off with armfuls of the good stuff? Organize your friends and politically ask your local toy store to install a figure-buying limit. If you keep your figures sealed on the card, take 'em out and play with them. If you've got a friend who stockpiles figures, open his up! And if you're tempted to buy that hot new toy in a comic shop for an insanely inflated price, fight the urge. You'll be sorry a month later when that same toy will be in a toy store at the original price. If you just ignore toy hoarders, eventually they'll go away.

(Viva la revolución!)

GREED! TOYS! MONGERING!

Hi all! I'm ToyFare Copy Editor Tom Root. You might remember me as the hooker with a heart of gold from "Models Inc." Anyway, I'm the new "FanFare" letters-answering mook, and so far I'm not sure whether to be pleased as punch or terrified. For every profound reader insight or brilliant question, there's a psychotic scribbling linking "Voltron" to the JFK assassination.

This month, the "greedy toy-monger" debate shows no signs of cooling off. In theory, I'd like to believe that if parties on both sides of an issue have a fair chance to present their arguments, we'll all find some common ground and celebrate with chocolate chip cookies and frosty mugs of Kool-Aid. In practice, both sides usually just rip each other's throats out. Witness:

Dear ToyFare,

Some fella named Nick Williams wrote a letter in your second ToyFare Special which I was very impressed with, and I just wanted to take a second to comment on his writings.

For one thing, you are definitely a "greedy toy-monger" and an ass to boot! It is one thing to go to a store and buy a rare figure, even two so you can open one (especially since that is what they are for!!!), but buying all of them—no way is that right. I've been at toy stores and watched the local comic store owner pick through six boxes of Star Wars figures, only to take out the one figure I needed from each box. That is greedy! That is being an ass!

You can charge all you want to, just don't buy all of the figures. I hope that you, and all of the rest of you "greedy toy-mongers," learn a thing or two about collecting, 'cause from what I've picked up, collecting doesn't involve selling.

You get stuff 'cause you like it, or to complete a set, not to rip off others.

Chip Everett Naperville, IL

Dear ToyFare,

This letter is in response to Nick Williams, the "greedy toy-monger." Waking up at the butt-crack of dawn and blazing a trail to your local toy store through treacherous weather to buy up any and all "rare" figures is not only stupid, but is in fact stealing from kids and real collectors who have had an interest in a character long before it was short-packed. How do I explain to my brother why he can't have a Maxx figure? "Well, some 40-year-old guy who probably doesn't have a job, much less a life, bought them all in an attempt to turn a quick buck"? Why don't you try female companionship on one of those chilly Saturday mornings? It beats the hell out of smuggling with your 10 "Tapestry" Picard figures.

David Diaz
Medford, NY

Dear ToyFare,

I am sick of hearing about the whining toy collectors. The main reason I am writing this letter is because of the experiences I have had while in the toy stores with my son. Most of the toy collectors I have encountered are rude bullies who intimidate the smaller children in the action figure aisle.

Toy collectors have to learn some manners and respect for others. For God's sake, as much fun as they are to collect, THEY ARE ONLY TOYS! They are pieces of molded plastic!

My advice to Nick Williams is to 1) get a life and 2) get a girlfriend! And finally, how about going out and finding a job to support your habit like the rest of us?

Gary Pelletier
Winthrop, MA

Poor Nick! Not only are the anti-monger legions casting aspersions on his moral net worth, they've started to belittle his love life! Well, it turns out old Nick's still got some fight left in him...

Dear ToyFare,

First off, I'm just a collector. I AM NOT A TOY DEALER.

If you want something you have to work for it. And if you want a rare toy (yes, they exist, it's not just dealer propaganda), you have to go looking for one. If you're not willing to inconvenience yourself a little for something you want, then you don't deserve it. And, admittedly, I sleep in most Saturdays.

On the cover of ToyFare, right below the main title, it reads, "The Guide to Collectible Toys." In fact, one of the main features of this magazine is the extensive price guide. It's not called "The Guide to Toy Enthusiasm" or "The Guide to Enjoying Toys, but Never Buying or Selling Them," let alone "The Guide for People Who are Born with All the Toys They Will Ever Have."

But I digress. For now I must get back to stealing toys from "real people" and selling them at outrageous markups. It's my career; it's how I get my kicks. My hobby is stealing from children.

Nick Williams
The Selfish, Greedy,
Parasitic, Evil, All-Around
Mean, Child-Intimidating,
Megalomaniacal, Lunatic
Toy-Monger
Alton, IL

If you had your business letterhead drawn up that way, Nick, it'd be the coolest thing.

Anyhow, perhaps now that all sides have had a chance to vent, it's time to find a compromise. To all the monger-haters, can any of you honestly say you haven't snapped up rare figures in the past, regardless of whether or not you liked the toy? And Nick, it really sucks when the toys you want aren't in stock because someone bought every single last one to re-sell down the line.

Shall we call a cease-fire? I think Nick's out of adjectives.

Dear ToyFare,

Are we to infer from the size of the new Electro-Spark Captain America that the super-soldier serum has major somatotropin effects? (That's growth hormone, for the scientifically challenged out there) Didja look at the size o' 'im?

Scott Lowery
Little Rock, AR

Not Knowing "somatotropin" makes us scientifically challenged? Here's a science quiz for ya: How many 99-cent Whoppers can a man eat before his colon simply goes on strike?

Anyway, you're not the only one with size on the brain, Scott, and for the answer to your Captain America question, keep reading...

Dear ToyFare,

Toy Biz is incredibly frustrating.

On the one hand, this year we're finally seeing much-demanded characters like Thor and Jean Grey as well as DESPERATELY needed re-sculpts of Storm, Rhino and the Lizard. They're producing Swarm and the Beetle, so I can hardly fault them for that.

So who makes stupid decisions like producing the insectoid version of the Wasp? They make her silliest incarnation, which only lasted a few issues? Much as I love Jan, I'm not buying the figure.

What bothers me most is their new habit of producing 6-inch figures. The reason I started seriously collecting Toy Biz Marvel figures is because the company seemed ready to produce the Marvel Universe. Now, Nova towers over Terrax, Captain America dwarfs Doctor Doom and EVERYONE is taller than Doc Samson. Jean Grey is going to stand a head taller than Cyclops. (And, honestly, the Star Riders Jan is one UGLY hunk of plastic. She doesn't count.) Certain figures SHOULD be larger than others—Colossus, the Hulk, She-Hulk, Apocalypse and Giant-Man come to mind. But Jean? The Silver Surfer? Captain America? They don't LOOK right with my other figures.

Sigh How can a company cool enough to produce a five-pack of the original X-Men possibly make such collector-unfriendly decisions?

Adam Hardy
via the Internet

Collectors have spoken, and Toy Biz listened. "Within the next part of 1997, we are going to great lengths to make sure the scale is true to the Marvel Universe," says Jesse Falcon, Toy Biz product manager. Falcon says the Biz was trying to offer collectors what they wanted with the 6-inch lines: bigger figures. But instead, toy fans were simply frustrated, and quite vocal about it, too. "We got hammered on it," Falcon says.

It's not always Toy Biz's fault, though. For example, the gigantism-plagued Electro-Spark Captain America was the result of a paragraph slip-up overseas, Falcon says. Ditto the Wolverine Unleashed figure from X-Men: Onslaught, whose size nearly rivals Onslaught himself. "We made over 300 figures in one year," Falcon says. "Mistakes happen."

As for the Avengers line, Falcon notes that the only figure completely out of scale with the rest of the Marvel Universe is Iron Man. The Scarlet Witch is in fact well under six inches, and therefore not a complete outcast from the standard line.

Dear ToyFare,

What reeks in here?

Jesse Juarez III
Salinas, CA

Eh...you might want to check out our impromptu science quiz above for the answer to that one.

Dear ToyFare,

I heard about the Lady Death figures coming out. My question is, I am 14 years old and would like to know if my local comic store will let me purchase it?

Ahmed Khan
Fairlawn, NJ

At first, this question reminded me of last month's "If the Lady Death action figure is made of plastic, does that mean her boobs are real?" letter, but it turns out there's much more to this.

Clayburn Moore, president and CEO of Moore Action Collectibles, says the Lady Death figure will in fact be packaged with the following label: "Recommended for mature collectors ages 18 and over."

As for Ahmed's concerns, Moore explains:

"The easy answer, Ahmed, is 'Ask your local comics retailer.' The longer and more difficult answer is that my approach is to Survey Says...

TOYFARE'S AOL POLL

Grrr! Nuthin' gets us more riled than a futile trip to the toy store. Where's Harley Quinn? Where's Grand Moff Tarkin? We'll tell you where they are—in the sweaty clutches of toy speculators, or as Lethargic Lad creator Greg Hyland calls 'em, TOY PIRATES! Pay $25 for a li'l Harley? We think not, ye salty dogs! Anyway, hunting down the Toy Pirates like rabid animals and dispensing some hot-led justice would be gratifying, but alas, mildly illegal. So the rest of us can do one thing—VENT! In that spirit...

How would YOU punish the TOY PIRATES?

- Seal them up in an airtight blister pack
- Tie them down and make them watch you tear open a mint-on-card Grand Moff Tarkin.
- "Tapestry" Picard-enamel! Think we can fit 20 of the li'l plastic Cop's in their Crevice of Doom? Make it so!
- Evil monkeys! We lock all the Toy Pirates in an arena with a pack of blood-crazed simians and watch as the monkeys mate with/dismember the bastards.
- Giant squids! We drop giant squids on them from the roving Toyfare helicopter and watch as the behemoth mollusks, desperate for water, must slake their thirst on the Pirates' salty blood!
- Cup shot with a croquet mallet.
- Other

Toy collectors don't just kinda dislike the Toy Pirates, they're all worked up into a frothy, murderous rage! Response was incredible this month, and just about everyone who responded had their own creative method for rubbing out the toy-mongers. We'll try to print as many responses as we can:

"Dip them in gravy and put them in a steel cage filled with rabid wolverines high on angel dust."

"Dress them like mimes, put them in glass boxes, and watch them die in full view of the public."

"Put a sign reading 'Free Star Wars Movie Theater Lukes' above a door, and the Toy Pirates walk through the entrance right into an operating wheat thresher."

"I would punish the Toy Pirates by vomiting in their mouths, and then I would bring forth the wrath of Miguel—the irritable, runny-stooled squirrel monkey—and allow him to commit unspeakable deeds upon the foul Pirate. Descriptive enough?"

Oh, we think so, Tikes.

HEY! more reader mail...

produce action figures which look as much as possible like the character in the comics themselves. They are for collectors and fans who want action figures of this kind. I made the decision to put an age recommendation on the packaging of the Chaos line because I feel that parents should be consulted regarding their children purchasing these particular figures.

"I cannot and will not dictate whether any given shop sells our action figures to minors, but I can put recommendations on our packaging when I feel it is appropriate and that is my right. I will determine on each line of characters we license whether I feel it is appropriate for children and what age level that is. After that, the shop owners, as adults, can make their own determination that they feel is right for their store. My recommendation to you, Ahmed (as it would be to any minor), is that you ask your parents to come with you to purchase the M.A.C. line of Chaos action figures. Thanks for the excellent question!"

Dear ToyFare,

I have one huge complaint with the toy manufacturers. I like the new electronic toys but I have to open the packages to remove the batteries from the toy, which results in my toy package being damaged. You can't leave the batteries in without them decaying. Is there an answer to this problem?

Augusta Tufts
Detroit, MI

The answer, Augusta, is not to worry about battery decay. There is no chance of that happening." Toy Biz's Jesse Falcon says: "For the batteries to corrode, they'd have to be decades old in really poor conditions." As long as the package stays sealed and the toy is kept in a cool, dry place, your Light-Up Gambit won't ooze battery acid through his spine.

Dear ToyFare Gods,

How come I can't find a listing for my Blackstar figures?

D. Phung
Edmonton, AB
Canada

We had two initial reactions to your letter. D. The first was, "Blackstar?" The second was, "Eh?" But when the cobwebs cleared, we realized you were talking about the figures from that early-'80s animated flop which ran for one scant season on CBS.

It all comes down to space and collector interest. There are other lines with much more secondary market activity, as well as brand "spunkin'" new lines each month, that've been hogging the guide in lieu of your beloved Blackstar. But it was actually a pretty sizable line, and that "Laser Light" sparkly feature in the later figures is nifty... ahh, what the hell? Just for showing some initiative, D., we'll stick Blackstar in this month's guide. And we might rotate the smaller lines in and out on a regular basis.

Dear ToyFare,

I collect Hot Wheels, Matchbox and some Johnny Lightning cars and it is next to impossible to find some sort of price guide (under $30, that is) for current items. You know what I mean? Okay, I know these aren't action figures and you've probably got your hands full pricing those wonderful pieces of plastic; however, you do call yourselves Toyfare!

Taylor Collins
San Diego, CA

We do indeed. What a conundrum!

The truth is, Taylor, action figures are a demanding mistress. They cram our offices, demand our constant attention and slurp down all the Cokes in the machine so we're left with nothing but that A&W Cream Soda crap.

But while action figures are Toyfare's primary focus, our Beanie Babies price guide should be a pretty good indication that nothing's written in stone. We read every last shred of mail we get, and if there's overwhelming demand for a certain toy line's inclusion, you can bet we won't ignore it. So make your voices heard from sea to shining sea, people!

Hey guys,

1. What's the buzz on Mystique, Rouge and Nightcrawler?

2. Are they ever gonna make Imperial Guard figs?

3. Ever heard of Silverhawks?

4. Why isn't "Sailor Moon" in the U.S. no more? (And what's going on in Japan?)

5. Why don't you guys say anything about the Power Rangers?

1. Toy-wise, Mystique and Nightcrawler have neat new figures in the X-Men: Monster Armor and Water Wars lines, respectively. As for rouge, try some! A little color in your cheeks can make all the difference.

2. Imperial Guard figs, Yoda toilet paper, Darth Vader hemorrhoid cream—nothing would surprise me at this point.

3. Sure have! But that Snarf guy annoys me to hell and back.

4. "Sailor Moon" currently airs at 8:30 a.m. EST Monday through Thursday on the USA cable network. As for Japan, it rebounded nicely from World War II and was considering automobiles as an export—like that'll fly.

5. Don't lose hope. The Power Rangers pop up in our "Girl Power!" feature this month.

Dear ToyFare,

I must get a subscription to your magazine, even though Leia looks like a stripper/hooker mix. I mean, what's up with the color? When I look at it I feel like she's going to strip for me and try to make a new race of humans like some sort of plastic people.

SKYBOLT TOYZ WINS ACCLAIM

X-O and Solar to be immortalized in plastic!

Skybolt Toyz, a small toy company known for the recent Helina and Nira X action figures (based on sister company Lightning Comics' characters), has increased its profile by signing an arrangement with Acclaim Comics to produce toys based on the publisher's superhero properties.

"We've entered into a non-exclusive agreement with Skybolt to create two figures in 1998 based on the Valiant Heroes versions of X-O Manowar and Solar, Man of the Atom," Acclaim Comics President and Publisher Fabian Nicieza announced.

Both figures will be released in the summer of 1998 (X-O in June and Solar in July) and will be sold through comic book and hobby stores. Tentative plans have also been set up to produce X-O and Solar in their "classic" costumes in 1999, which would tie in with planned story content for the Valiant Heroes line of Acclaim titles. Playmates already has the license to produce action figures based on Acclaim's Turok comics.

Skybolt Vice President of Marketing Steve Zyskowski is excited about the possibilities of this agreement. "These characters have been around for quite a while and have a long line of fans that stretches through decades, and I think they'll have a real warm reception to these figures," Zyskowski said.

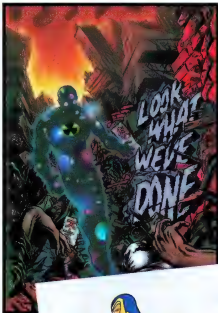

The deal between the two companies was cemented over the comic book convention season this past summer. Nicieza explained that Acclaim was actively looking to license their characters to various companies and Skybolt was the first to approach them. "I was impressed by the sculpting on the prototypes for Nira X and Sinthia," Nicieza said. "They obviously made an improvement from their first figure and are aggressively expanding their marketplace."

Out of the stable of Valiant characters, X-O and Solar were the most attractive to Skybolt for many reasons. "Those two have the most recognition and potential," Zyskowski explained. "We can create some dynamic action figures with really cool effects, like metallic chrome armor or glow-in-the-dark [decoys]. We can also do some really interesting chase figures."

Possibilities include a see-through X-O in stealth mode and a glow-in-the-dark Solar figure. "We want the chase figures to not only be special but accurately portray who and what the character is," Nicieza explained.

The X-O and Solar action figures provide Acclaim an opportunity to expand the profile of their characters, and also gives Skybolt a chance to broaden their horizons. "This is the type of product that we want to hold above everything else we've done and show people what we can do with superheroes," Zyskowski said. "I want to see Fabian really happy when these come out. I want these figures to be everything that Acclaim wants them to be." ■ Tom Palmer Jr.

DIAMOND OFFERS BATMAN AND BABYLON 5 TOY EXCLUSIVES

Batman and Babylon 5 head for comic store shelves!

Diamond Comic Distributors Inc., the world's largest distributor of English-language comic books and related merchandise, has announced that it will begin offering several major toy exclusives to its clientele of comic book and specialty shops.

"We understand that our retailers often find it difficult to compete in terms of price with mass market toy retailers—such as Toys

R Us and Wal-Mart—due to the volume of product those outlets buy from manufacturers," said Tom Stormonth, executive director of purchasing at Diamond. "These exclusives will enable our retailers to attract consumers into comics shops with products they won't find anywhere else."

Topping Diamond's list is the Batman "Rogues Gallery" Action Figure Boxed Set, produced in time to capitalize on the relaunch of the animated "The Adventures of Batman and Robin" on Kids' WB and possible direct-to-video release of "Sub-Zero" (which may also be released on the big screen), an animated adventure pitting Batman against Mr. Freeze. In this exclusive, limited to just 12,000 individually numbered sets for October release, Diamond will offer eight re-decoed Kenner Batman: The Animated Series action figure villains in a special tri-fold, maximum security "jail" display box. Included in the set are the Joker, Catwoman, Poison Ivy, Killer Croc, Scarecrow, Man-Bat, Phantasm and Clayface, each with their original accessories. For collectors, this is a rare opportunity to obtain these discontinued figures.

Additionally, Diamond will offer the eagerly anticipated Babylon 5 toys from Exclusive Toy Products Inc. to its retailers in a joint effort with Toys R Us. Three 9-inch action figures based on the popular "Babylon 5" television show—including the Minbari Lennier, Ranger Marcus Cole and the Centaursi Vir—will see early fall release in October to comic stores, just prior to the line's debut at Toys R Us.

Diamond will also offer the 12-inch Elite Brigade figures, the Air Police Action Figure and Vietnam Medic; Hasbro's History of Batman and History of Superman 3-Packs (once FAO Schwarz exclusives); and the Stealth Cylon from Trendmasters (previously exclusive to Hangar 18) to its retailers in a limited 5,000-figure release.

For details on ordering these and other Diamond products, see Diamond's August Previews catalog. ■ The ToyFare Staff

ROB LIEFELD UNVEILS SOME AWESOME TOYS, DUDE!

The newest contenders for your toy dollars are a line of 7-inch action figures based on characters from the recently formed Awesome Entertainment Universe, home of Rob Liefeld's Prophet, Shaft, Youngblood, Supreme and a plethora of other superheroes. Prophet kicked off the line of figures in August, and according to Matt Hawkins, Awesome's director of promotions marketing, that's just the start.

"We wanted to get it out there to comic book stores for one main reason: to get these toys right into the hands of the collectors who are most familiar with the characters," Hawkins said. "One of the things we did for collectors was give Prophet a huge sword, almost as long as his body. It's one of the largest swords I've ever seen on an action figure."

Following Prophet, Awesome plans to release a Shaft figure in December. "The figure looks excellent and it's a different figure than the original Shaft that was done through [McFarlane] Toys as part of the Youngblood line," Hawkins said. "Don't get me wrong, that was an excellent toy, but this one is different. We used the cover of Team Youngblood #19 as the sculpting illustration, and Rob [Liefeld] himself actually sculpted some of the stuff himself when he wasn't happy with some of the face detailing."

Hawkins is quick to point out that these two figures are just the tip of the iceberg.

"There have been a lot of Awesome characters mentioned as possibilities for action figure treatment," Hawkins said.

"This isn't conclusive by any means, but we are looking at doing figures of the Fighting American, Glory and a number of others. What we're hoping to do is come out with a toy each quarter, to maintain the Awesome line, and we are very, very committed to bringing out really high-quality sculpted figures. We're all having a lot of fun working on these, and that really comes through in the figures." ■ Matthew Brady

TOUGH, MEAN AND FULL OF BEANS

These bean-filled Meanies aren't for babies!

Say hello to the latest toy sensation to cash in on the Beanie Babies craze: Meanies, bean-filled critters with a twist! Created by Allen LeWinter, one of the original members of the marketing team for Barney the Dinosaur, the all-new beanbag Meanies weren't just a knee-jerk reaction to being exposed to the sweetness of Barney for years and years.

"It was a reaction to the fact that my house has hundreds of Beanie Babies in it," LeWinter said. "Girls and their mothers are obsessed with them, but I never saw boys playing with them. I figured it was time for a beanbag toy aimed at boys, so my wife, a college friend and I came up with the idea and the names of the Meanies. These are so slanted and full of personality, they appeal to boys, girls, teens and adults."

LeWinter said that once the idea was set, it was easy to talk toy manufacturer The Idea Factory into production. "They loved the idea," LeWinter said. "We came up with 48 ideas, and then scaled it down to 12 for the first assortment. Believe me, if you think the initial 12 are bad, wait and see what's coming up in the next series."

Hitting stores Oct. 1, the first assortment of Meanies includes such potential gross-outs as Boris the Mucousaurus; Hurley the Pukin' Toucan; Fi and Do the Dalmutation, a two-headed Dalmatian with three eyes in one head and one eye in the other; Splat the Road Kill Kat; Peter the Gotta Pegguli; Sledge, the Hammered Head Shark; Otis the Octapunk; and the ever-lovable but gaseously challenged Bart the Elephant. Each Meanie comes with a limerick describing the character and retails for $4.99...that is, before the inevitable after-market mark-up.

The second wave of Meanies is scheduled to ship in January, and includes Flap, the Velocirapper; Donny Didn't Duck; Holy Cow; and Tick the Contagious Cat, among others.

"We've filled in a market that was, until now, wide open," LeWinter said. "And we're having a great time doing it. These are some of the coolest beanbags you'll ever see." ■ Matthew Brady

Fi and Do the Dalmutation (far left) and Otis the Octapunk are a twisted response to those cute lil' Beanie Babies.

KNOCK-OFF ALERT!

STAR WARS TOYS GET BOOTLEGGED!

What is It?

Galaxy Empire, a line of action figures bootlegged from Kenner's current mega-popular Star Wars: Power of the Force toys.

What's the Deal?

The bane of many toy companies, bootlegged action figures—or “knock-offs”—are illegally produced toys based on existing designs or sculptures. In the case of Galaxy Empire here, an unnamed Chinese toy company took some current POTF offerings, made molds of the figures and tooled up the original 3 3/4-inch design to a whopping 6 inches! In addition, the bootlegger slapped on a few coats of bad paint—often incorrectly—and gave ‘em just one of their original weapons, also re-sized.

The Cincinnati-based Kenner division of Hasbro, which declined to comment, is very much aware of fly-by-night operations seeking to capitalize on its great success with Star Wars product, and is working to ensure that its mega-popular toys aren't pirated now or in the future.

Should You Buy 'Em?

Heck, nobody's stopping you. But buyer beware: It's not the real thing.

If you're a hardcore Star Wars fan, Galaxy Empire might be a goofy addition to your collection. Go to town. However, Kenner actively discourages collectors from purchasing such knock-offs because of their obvious inferior quality. As far as collectibles go, because these are non-sanctioned items, Galaxy Empire figures would never be as valuable as, say, the “Special Edition” Jedi Knight Luke. Worth a laugh, but not much else. ■ The ToyFare Staff

MICKEY SAYS, 'DON'T OPEN YOUR TOYS!'

Fresh from the “What the hell?” files, the following excerpt from the August 30 issue of Disney Adventures:

“The No. 1 rule of collecting action figures? Don't take them out of the package!”

After having Disney's collecting tip pointed out to us by a baffled toy enthusiast, ToyFare contacted Comics Editor Heidi MacDonald at Disney Adventures to have her solve this mystery for toy fans and collectors. Does Disney really recommend keeping toys mint in package?

“It certainly wasn't an article on playing with toys, it was an article about collecting toys,” MacDonald said. “Toys that are left in the box are more ‘collectible’ than those that are taken out of the box.”

Was the article Disney's attempt at turning its legions of young fans into toy hoarders? “I don't think it's saying, ‘Keep your collectibles in the package,’” MacDonald said. “I think it's saying, ‘Keep your collectibles in the package, if you want them to be worth a lot of money.’ I think it's just kind of basic advice.”

MacDonald continued, “I'm very much against the whole idea of keeping them in the package. I think comics are meant to be read and toys are meant to be played with. It's the difference between toys that are meant to be played with and starting a col-

Action Figures
The No. 1 rule of collecting action figures? Don't take them out of the package! The value of your collection is based on its condition. Figures missing accessories or stuck in the spokes of your bicycle are worth waaaaay less. Look for limited-edition figures, special fealection of action figures.

“I don't think we'd ever say, ‘Don't play with your toys.’”

Whew! We'd hate to see Pluto turn into a “greedy toy-monger.” ■ The ToyFare Staff

TOY OF THE MONTH

SEPTEMBER'S coolest action figure... POACHER!

Who: The elephantine Poacher, a vengeful anthropomorphic hunter who collects trophies from hunts throughout the ages. If you've got a wild animal in your crosshairs, watch out: Poacher's got your number!

What: Poacher joins such bizarre creatures as Corn Boy, Quartz, Smugler, Blitz and Brain Drain as part of the second wave of Total Chaos figures from McFarlane Toys [Editor's Note: Check out the entire assortment in "On Sale Now" on page 15.] Even without a comic book tie-in, the first wave of Total Chaos last year was successful enough to pave the way for this year's second assortment of nasty monsters.

Where: Available at all toy and comic book/hobby stores.

When: September

Why: He's a giant freakin' elephant, fer cryin' out loud! What other reason do you need to buy this figure? Everything about Poacher just screams "neato toy." He's a big nasty pachyderm (that's fancy talk for elephant) who takes vengeance on illegal game hunters. There's nothing uncool about that. Like every other McFarlane Toys figure, he comes decked out with tons of accessories, including a big honkin' gun, some sharp pointy weapons and a bunch o' bleached white bones. The sculpting is top-notch as well. This 6-inch figure's got a whole mess of details, like two broken-off tusks, a long trunk pierced with two bones (for the alternative set), leathery elephant-like gray skin and a beady-eyed stare that'll have all them nasty big game hunters quakin' in their boots. ■ The ToyFare Staff

WEBSITE OF THE MONTH

<http://www.aftimes.com>

Talk about your interactive media!

The bulk of Action Figure Times, now entering its third year on the World Wide Web, is written by its readers. And that's exactly what makes AFT such a can't-miss for cyber-surfin' toy fanatics.

Updated twice weekly for its thousands of monthly visitors, the Van Nuys, Calif.-based Action Figure Times offers a wide spectrum of toy-related departments to choose from. News, humor and "Ask Randy," a toy collecting advice column, are all AFT staples, but the popularity of the website's massive rumor mill overshadows them all.

Editor Don Aquilino and Assistant Editor Andrew Gaughen say the reader-written rumor section is the must-see tourist attraction for web wanderers, but they urge persuers to arm themselves with a healthy dose of skepticism.

Gaughen says one of the most enduring rumors concerned the existence of a "Clear Yoda," a never-produced Star Wars: Power of the Force action figure much like the translucent "Spirit of Obi-Wan" Kenobi mail-away offer from Kenner and Frito-Lay.

The tremendous reader feedback gives Action Figure Times an excellent handle on what's hot: Gaughen says to no one's surprise, Star Wars toys continue to dominate, but he notes that interest in wrestling figures has taken a surprising upswing.

With fan loyalty as powerful as AFT's, the website should endure well into the future. But just in case, Gaughen says he and Aquilino closely adhere to their philosophy of Toy Karma: "If you don't hoard, if you don't overpurchase, good stuff will come back to you."

And if someone tries to sell you a clear Yoda, whack 'em with a board. ■ Tom Root

COMPANY UPDATES

McFARLANE TOYS

McFarlane's got a whole mess of exclusives coming a-tide. Here's a list of what's in store to get 'em: Spider Series K's Spider will now have a human-like head and arms in a repaint available from a number of nationwide retail chains like Kmart. Thrifty Playless King Statures and Poacher Zin. The Barbarellas now sports a red joint job, a new jaw and a stand for posing him, available through J.C. Penney. There will be an exclusive 13-inch Mad Max Spidee through Kay-Bee. Look for three new versions of Angela: a gold deluxe of Kay-Bee, as well as a greater Angela and "Monopoly like" Angela (made from clear blue plastic) for the McFarlane Toys Collector's Club. The toy club will also offer a Macguy Spidee and plans are in the works for a brand new figure available exclusively to club members. To join the McFarlane Toys Collector's Club, call 1-800-99-SPAWN or (313) 414-1508. With the wonders of McFarlane Toys' KISS figures, rumors have been flying about the company taking on other rock bands like GN'R, the Millies and even the Spice Girls. We'd give our collective left leg for a Scary Spice figure, but the official word from the company is that at this time there are no plans for anything like. But there doesn't mean things won't change, either.

MATTEL

Rumors about another Star Wars "Pop Culture" Battle offering devoted to "The E-Flame" are untrue. A source at Mattel explained that a Locally Sourced and Thicker Than included like an interesting idea, but nothing is in the works.

TOY BUZZ

- Playmates hints that a WildC.A.T.s Voodoo repaint might find its way under Christmas trees this year, as an exclusive to WildStorm.
- Playmates' re-engineered Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles line will implement a top-secret "stealth feature" in its '98 line—very hush-hush.
- Toy Biz may add "Tomb Raider" to its lineup of new action figure assortments based on video game sensations like its already-planned Resident Evil and Street Fighter vs. X-Men toys.

CORRECTION: The grand prize winner for ToyFare #2's Legion of Super-Heroes "Homemade Heroes" contest will receive artwork from artist Ran Boyd, not Jeffrey May, as previously stated. Our apologies, yo!

TOYFARE SPECIAL REPORT

San Diego Comic Con '97

Action Figure Update

Attendees of last July's San Diego Comic Con got more than just their fair share of comic books and science fiction collectibles as major toy companies set up shop to show off their upcoming action figure wares.

From small-press comic book publishers-turned-toy-makers like Antarctic Press and Skybolt Toys (a division of Lightning Entertainment), to action figure giants like Hasbro, Toy Biz and Playmates, much of the foot traffic at the Con included stops to check out the latest fully possible heroes and villains from various toy licenses. And according to Jesse Falcon, product manager at Toy Biz, a strong toy presence at the Comic Con is merely indicative of a growing trend among both collectors and toy companies. "Everybody's getting into action figures now," he said. "And action figures in general have shown nearly a 75 percent increase in presence level at the San Diego Con from last year's show."

As Playmates Star Trek Product and Brand Manager Chris Overly attested, such conventions are natural extensions of the toy market.

"For Playmates and for Star Trek especially, we wanted to let the public know that we're interested in all aspects of the business—from comics to collectors' cards to toys," Overly said. "We wanted to really push the fact that we make the best-detailed figures in the business, and we understand that collectors today know that their comic books and toys are their bedfellows and investment stock for the future. We wanted to make sure that we're making something that will last for them as well as us."

The following is a sampling of some of the biggest and best new products unveiled in San Diego for the first time, as major toy companies rubbed elbows with the comic book and sci-fi fans that help keep them in business:

Bot-villain the Mad Hatter and his sidekick robot (left) are some of the new releases from Kenner previewed at July's San Diego Comic Con.

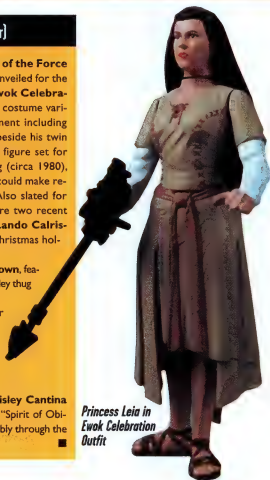

Star Wars: Power of the Force (Kenner)

Fans and collectors anxious for a peek at the latest Star Wars: Power of the Force figures had to jostle for elbow room at the well-visited Kenner booth. Unveiled for the very first time were the November 1997 debut of Princess Leia in Ewok Celebration Outfit. This Leia is the company's first stab at this particular Leia costume variant—and well worth the wait! Leia ships in November in an assortment including Malakili (Rancor Keeper), EV-9D9 Droid and Nien Nunb. Sighted beside his twin sister was the all-new Luke Skywalker in Bespin Gear, an action figure set for December shipping. Luke is an update of the company's first offering (circa 1980), except this time around the young Jedi sports a removable hand, which could make reenactments of "The Empire Strikes Back" that much more realistic! Also slated for release alongside Luke (though not appearing at the Kenner booth) are two recent additions to the Power of the Force line: Endor Rebel Soldier and Lando Calrissian in General's Gear. Look for all of these figures in time for the Christmas holiday rush.

Kenner also displayed the current Cinema Scene 3-Pack, Cantina Showdown, featuring a resculpted Obi-Wan Kenobi and Ponda Baba (Walrusman), plus Mos Eisley thug Dr. Evazan, immortalized as an action figure for the first time.

And to further show fans that where the Force is concerned, Kenner ain't just kidding around, the company previewed its Internet exclusive B'omarr Monk. For details on how to order this limited character, spied only briefly in "Return of the Jedi" (look for a monk ambling by C-3PO and R2-D2 when they enter Jabba's palace), just log on to the official Kenner Star Wars website at <http://starwars.hasbro.com>.

And finally, Kenner reported in San Diego that the cardboard Mos Eisley Cantina playset—offered previously as a coupon exclusive shipping with the Lay's "Spirit of Obi-Wan" Kenobi—would most likely be available soon to larger audiences, possibly through the Star Wars Insider magazine. We'll keep you posted on the details.

Alien Resurrection (Kenner)

Also drawing large attractions at the Kenner booth was the company's display of the all-new Alien Resurrection action figures. Based on the forthcoming Jean-Pierre Jeunet-directed film of the same name—the fourth installment of the creepy extraterrestrial saga begun with 1979's "Alien" shockfest—Kenner's new collector-aimed lineup features dynamic action sculpting and vibrant decoes. Additionally, the line features the first-ever action figure likeness of Winona Ryder (playing the android Call in the film). Of course, it wouldn't be an "Alien" flick without tough gal Sigourney Weaver reprising her role as Ripley (a clone this time around), all set to take on an Alien action figure assortment rounded out by an Alien Warrior, Aqua Alien and Battle Scar Alien. A fourth Alien creature—slated to debut in the film—was kept secret for the time being. Look for it, as well as "Alien Resurrection," to excite sci-fi fans this November. ■

Star Trek (Playmates)

Not to be outdone by any of its competition, Playmates—makers of all things Star Trek—premiered its upcoming assortments in an interactive booth complete with Federation captain's chairs.

Locutus and the Borg Queen showed fans why the unstoppable cyborgs are such cult faves for Trekkers everywhere.

In addition, Playmates' ongoing 9-inch Collectors Series figures continued to feed toy fans' nostalgia for Mego size and the added benefit of cloth costumes and nifty accessories.

In the Ultra Trek assortment—figures arriving in their own clear Lucite display boxes—Playmates gave fans a glimpse at the muscle-shirted William Shatner as the "Mirror, Mirror" Captain Kirk!

But the best by far was Playmates' unveiling of several new additions to its ongoing standard assortments. Side by side with such anxiously awaited figures as the "City on the Edge of Forever"-based Edith Keeler (which even has scriptwriter and sci-fi guru Harlan Ellison champing at the bit for one!), Klingon Captain Koloth and the "Star Trek: The Motion Picture"-inspired Ilia, were the company's first renderings of such classic Trek figures as Trelayne ("The Squire of Gothos"), the Andorian ("Whom Gods Destroy") and the goateed alternate universe Mr. Spock from "Mirror, Mirror"! In addition, Playmates showed off its new "Deep Space Nine"-inspired action figure of the Attendant (the "Mirror, Mirror" Kira from the episode "Crossover").

Playmates Star Trek Product and Brand Manager Chris Overly was on hand to reiterate the company's ongoing commitment to collectors by offering more character favorites, in addition to improving the size of both the action figures' heads and hands to be more in scale with their relative body sizes. "We're trying to make as real a figure as possible," Overly said. "So if a figure's 4 1/2 inches tall, it's going to be true to scale in every dimension. We're also reducing some of the articulation, so collectors can see these figures in their full, beautifully sculpted detail, without having the articulation as a limitation." ■

Blade: Vampire Hunter (Toy Biz)

Comic fans checking out Marvel Comics' big plans for 1998 frequently gravitated toward Toy Biz's satellite booth manned by product managers Jesse Falcon and Damon Nee to check out the Biz's upcoming action figure offerings.

Much of the oohing and ahing was aimed at Toy Biz's action figure assortment based on the upcoming "Blade" feature film starring big-screen action guy Wesley Snipes as Marvel's vampire-hunting...uh...vampire! The figures include a sword-wielding Blade, the vampire hunter's mentor Whisper (played onscreen by Kris Kristofferson) and the inevitable bad guy Deacon Frost (portrayed in the film by Stephen Dorff). A fourth figure (not shown) features Blade in a costume shown near the film's end. According to Falcon, the action figures' looks and potential success owe a great deal to the film's star.

"They're cool because Wesley says so," he said. "It's really the first big-budget, big-screen Marvel movie, and because of that we were so incredibly excited just to do Blade figures. Nearly everybody on the planet has been waiting for Marvel to finally work out a movie deal, so we really wanted to make the best possible figures, and show people what we could do with a movie property. With Blade's detail and sculpting, I think it's one of the best lines I've ever worked on."

Look for both "Blade" the film and Blade toys to debut in February 1998. ■

Street Fighter vs. X-Men (Toy Biz)

While many fans were blown away by Blade's blood and gore, X-philes (no, the other X-philes) and video game buffs were busy checking out Toy Biz's eagerly anticipated Street Fighter vs. X-Men action figures based on the popular Capcom video game.

The Biz's Street Fighter vs. X-Men figures on display included the first of several planned two-pack matchups: Cyclops vs. M. Bison; Wolverine vs. Akuma; and Ken vs. Sabretooth. A fourth initial twin-pack, Ryu vs. Magneto, was not shown. The first of these figures are slated for Christmas 1998 release (with an affordable $9.99 suggested retail) with future offerings—late Spring 1998—to possibly include matchups featuring such mutants and fighters as Rogue, Cammy, Apocalypse, Chun Li, Storm, Zangief and Juggernaut.

According to Falcon, Street Fighter vs. X-Men action figures are a no-brainer for video game fans and readers of Marvel Comics' mega-popular mutants' ongoing X-titles.

"This is something that collectors and fans of Capcom and 'Street Fighter' have wanted to see done right for a long time," Falcon said. "We got a chance to go in and really, really give the figures detailing the way we wanted to—and the way it should be done. We're pretty excited about the line and we're really looking forward to working with Capcom more in the future." ■

G.I. JOE SPECIAL REPORT

G.I. Joe is Back in Action!

Yo Joe!

It's been said that Hasbro's launch of the original G.I. Joe in 1964 and subsequent 1982 reincarnation of the property as a 3 3/4-inch "Real American Hero" could be studied on college campuses as object lessons in brilliant toy marketing. Both versions of the "fully articulated man of action" were huge successes, due in no small part to innovative marketing and bold leaps of faith.

Unfortunately, Hasbro's post-1994 "small-Joe" efforts would receive a failing grade by even the kindest of professors. Both the Sgt. Savage and G.I. Joe Extreme lines contained some intriguing elements—war comics veteran Joe Kubert's design input and package art for the former; a promising (but ultimately mediocre) Dark Horse comic series for the latter—but fell victim to half-hearted promotion and misguided emulation of their non-articulated cousins Batman and Star Wars. As the Extreme material drew its last breath, so too did Hasbro's efforts to support a full-range G.I. Joe line aimed at kids.

But now all that has changed.

October and November 1997 will see a one-year release of the Real American Hero Collection, re-decoed 3 3/4-inch Joes exclusive to Toys R Us. Planned for production are six vehicle-and-figure sets and two three-figure Joe assortments. Also slated is a deluxe "Stars and Stripes Forever" set consisting of the eight original 1982 figures, along with a flag and playset base reminiscent of the flag-planting at Iwo Jima.

According to Vinnie D'Alleva, senior marketing director at Hasbro

New Ventures, the Toys R Us exclusives present an opportunity to offer a wider assortment than would be possible in a general release. "We can see how consumers react to new things we're trying, like three-figure packages and vehicle-with-figure combinations, and that helps our planning for 1999."

While the Real American Hero Collection has many of the earmarks of a collector-oriented release, don't hold your breath waiting for "special metallic re-casts" or other price-inflators; D'Alleva stresses that Hasbro New Ventures is keeping kids in mind. "The figures and vehicles will be produced at no more or no less quality than what is done for kid's releases," he says. "We're working to keep the price point at a very appealing level so parents and their children can get excited about these G.I. Joes too."

Hasbro is working from the original tooling for the re-release, which has meant a good-sized headache for all involved. The tooling for 3 3/4-inch G.I. Joe is spread all over the world at Hasbro subsidiaries, licensee factories and companies that bought or leased the molds. "It's not so hard actually getting the tooling, but it's very difficult to figure out exactly where everything is for exactly what we want," D'Alleva says. "Sometimes, even when we get what we're looking for, it arrives in unusable condition." As a result, actual figures, vehicles and accessories may vary from the advance pictures supplied by Hasbro.

Hasbro is hesitant to refer to the Toys R Us release as a test, but collectors hoping for a wider assortment of 3 3/4-inch figures may have reason to be optimistic. "We're very sure of success in 1998, and we have follow-up ideas all ready to go," promises D'Alleva. ■ Harlan W. Moore

TOYFARE TAKES A GANDER AT THE HOTTEST NEW RELEASES

KULL THE CONQUEROR

Everything old is new again...even the adventures of an ancient barbarian king!

This fall, Robert E. Howard's warrior Kull the Conqueror gets a new major motion picture and a spiffy new action figure line from Toy Biz.

Kull's been around for quite a while, first in pulp adventure stories in the 1930s by Howard (also the creator of Conan the Barbarian), then as a Marvel comic book in the 1970s and '80s. Now he's getting the feature-film treatment in an upcoming flick starring Kevin Sorbo (star of TV's "Hercules: The Legendary Journeys") and Tia Carrere ("Wayne's World").

"Kull the Conqueror" follows the adventures of a lowly barbarian soldier who rises from the bloody trenches to become king. Once the throne is his, however, Kull discovers keeping the crown ain't no walk in the park. And when King Kull's rule begins, all sorts of baddies rally forces to try and conquer the conqueror. This sword-and-sorcery epic might be treading some familiar ground—after all, it was created by that Conan guy—but with Sorbo's popularity through "Hercules," there's no telling just how high the Kull property could sail.

The old Kull is new again, and when Toy Biz tackled the figures from the movie, the company tried to keep that in mind. "We tried to do some different things with the line," said Jesse Falcon, Toy Biz product manager. The Kull figures will feature snap-on armor and—a first for Toy Biz's 5-inch scale—rooted hair!

Due to ship in September and seen here for the first time, the Kull figures will include, naturally, Kull; his nemesis Talagaro, commander of the evil Dragon Legion; and King Kull. In addition to the armor, each figure will include a bevy of accessories, including such heavy metal armaments as swords, battle axes and war hammers.

Falcon said the look of the figures is very close to the movie. "The actors got a chance to approve the likenesses," he said. The feedback, according to Falcon, was quite positive. Toy Biz has already cast Sorbo's likeness in plastic for its Hercules: The Legendary Journeys toy line, so his reaction was surprising. "We heard back from Kevin Sorbo that he felt that it was the closest likeness of him that he had seen from us so far," Falcon said.

WHO'S IN THE ASSORTMENT?

Kull, King Kull and the villainous Talagaro

WHEN?

The figures should be hitting a store near you this very month!

WHAT'S THE DEAL?

Based on the upcoming "Kull the Conqueror" movie, the Kull figures feature so darn many accessories, you won't believe your eyes. In addition to weapons and snap-on armor, each figure includes rooted hair, a first for Toy Biz 5-inch action figures.

"So that was cool."

Sorbo's thumbs-up was especially positive, Falcon said, because sculpting the visages of real people as opposed to comic book characters can sometimes be trickier than it looks. "It's kind of weird when you're working with doing actual likenesses," Falcon said. "Sometimes sculpting it as close as possible isn't the best thing; some actors and actresses want their likeness embellished." In other words, rather than recreating every little wrinkle and contour, sometimes capturing the spirit of the character is what's important, and that can often pose a bigger challenge to toy sculptors.

The popularity of sword-and-sorcery properties as a whole could help nudge "Kull the Conqueror" into big box office. "Hercules" and its companion series, "Xena: Warrior Princess" have met with great success on the small screen, and Disney's animated "Hercules" feature didn't do too shabbily this summer, either. And Kull's success as a toy line could be aided by its compatibility with Toy Biz's Hercules line, Falcon said. "Kevin Sorbo is a very popular pop icon," he said, and kids will recognize the connection.

Currently, nothing beyond the initial three figures is planned, according to Falcon, but that could change depending on the life of "Kull the Conqueror" after theaters. "If the film hits huge and there is a sequel, or it becomes an animated TV show, there's a good chance for line extension," Falcon said.

In that case, ol' Kull will be new yet again. And again. And again.

Mr. Monster

Todd McFarlane takes on his critics and reveals exactly why he likes scary toys

"I want to be the King of aisle seven."

says Todd McFarlane, creator of Spawn and head honcho at McFarlane Toys. "That's it for right now. Just aisle seven. One step at a time."

You just might've heard of this guy before: He was once the fan-favorite creator on Spider-Man before leaving Marvel to become a founding member of Image Comics. At Image, McFarlane created Spawn, the No. 1 comic six years running. And then he founded McFarlane Toys, makers of some of the weirdest and wildest creatures on action figure shelves. Oh, and he's also the impetus behind the "Spawn" animated series on HBO and, most recently, the creative fire behind the special effects-laden "Spawn" feature film, which hit theaters this summer. Not too shabby for a guy from Canada who just wanted to draw comic books...and make the coolest toys only he could imagine.

From the outset, McFarlane's action figures have broken toy industry rules and set whole new trends. Larger than standard figures (averaging 7 inches tall), McFarlane Toys' offerings feature extensive detail and paint deco, along with gruesome themes and more than a little blood and guts. Translation: They're pretty darn popular.

But McFarlane is quick to point out that he doesn't do it all alone. "We have three offices for the toys: one in New Jersey, one in Michigan and an office in Hong Kong," he says. "I've got a great bunch of designers and other guys working for me to get these toys out there."

Currently, McFarlane Toys produces four action figure lines: Spawn, based on the hit comic series and film, Total Chaos, a collection of creatures and monsters of Todd's own design, Todd McFarlane's Monsters, classic monsters redesigned and set in intricately detailed dioramas, and the most recent addition, KISS, based on McFarlane's own interpretation of the mega-popular metal rockers.

Do collectors go for these figures? Does a bear...yknow...in the woods? Some of the earlier McFarlane figures are among the most difficult action figures to find, and the new assortments practically fly off the shelves.

How does it all work? ToyFare managed to grab a few minutes of McFarlane's time to ask him just that.

TOYFARE: First off, Todd, let's start with the basics. How did McFarlane Toys get up and running?

McFARLANE: Obviously, when you have a book like Spawn, which is consistently at the top of the charts, [licensors] come out of the woodwork, including toy manufacturers. A good many of them made their phone calls or presentations shortly after the book started hitting it big. We had our discussions, but ultimately it came down to the fact that those toy companies wouldn't allow me to sign off on [and approve] my toys.

It was the same thing that happened when I quit Marvel to form Image. They said, "You want to make toys? Yeah sure, little boy. You go and try." I got irritated when people tell me what I can and can't do in my life, so I got a couple people together and we started a toy company fueled on the anger that these guys were treating me like I couldn't do it. The only thing that stops anyone on the planet from doing anything is time, ambition and money. Luckily, I've got most of that.

Why did you choose to go with an unconventional size and loads of detailed sculpting, rather than the tried-and-true methods of other companies?

Ultimately, it's probably the same rationale I use with everything else: I'm not really worried about the competition. I don't really know what's going on at Toy Biz, Kenner or any of those other guys. I've got Spawn to worry about. Let me just do what I want to do, and let everybody else worry about me.

When we started, our first goal was to make as good a toy as we could, and from there, try to sell it so we can break even. I've found that with all the other ventures that I do, if you put out a good product at a good price, and you treat people fairly, they'll be loyal and support your product. If you don't over-hype it, or try to gouge them, they'll buy it.

How is this different from the "big guys"?

Big toy corporations actually work in the opposite way. They set up budgets and see how many units they have to sell and how much profit they have to make on each toy, and they work downward. So for them to make four million bucks, they figure they have to sell a million units at their cost of 35 cents each. Then they go to their creative guys and say, "We need you to make us a lot of money, but you've only got 35 cents per figure." So they immediately put restrictions on their creators.

The big guys seem to feel that it has to be one way at all times, and from there, I don't think they actually expand their thought process until someone like me comes along and shows them that it can be done in a different way. And then they do knock-offs of my stuff.

My attitude is: Make the toy first, and then put a price tag on it. Once you're done with it, if it's $5.99 instead of $4.99, it doesn't matter. To some degree, the price is irrelevant. If it's a product that people really want, price doesn't matter. People will spend the money if they want the product.

Speaking of those knock-offs, the action figure market hasn't been the same since your figures came on the scene. What do you think the influence of the McFarlane Toys line has been on the rest of the toy industry?

I think I've shown some of the bigger players that there is a huge collectible market, and that the [collectible] marketplace can actually support an entire company, which is what it is essentially doing for me. I don't think that they were paying attention to that market enough.

Once you realize that there's a different pool of buyers out there, then you also have to admit that because they're older, their tastes are more discriminating, so you have to alter the appearance of what you're selling. It's no different from movies, where if you've got 5-year-old kids, you take them to the G movie. If you've got older kids, you take them to the PG-13 and maybe the R-rated movies. As you get older, you want something a little more sophisticated. That's what my toys are. My toys are the PG-13 or the R-rated toys, compared to the other companies' G and PG toys.

Early on, you were making toys for nearly all the other Image creators. You're not doing that anymore. What happened?

It had nothing to do with Image politics or anything like that. The only reason I'm not doing any more figures for them is because I also run a business. Can I sell as many Total Chaos figures as I could [Rob Liefeld's] Youngblood? The answer is yes. And because I'm no longer paying another royalty to Rob Liefeld on top of that, I've got more money to put back into the company to produce more products. With [WildStorm's] Wetworks, we went at it twice, but I've got a finite amount of finances available to me. I'm better off doing a line with KISS, which has a stronger brand name than Wetworks.

[Editor's Note: Rob Liefeld, after an aborted deal with Trendmasters, has gone on to produce his figures through Awesome Toys, his own company. See "ToyFare News" for details.]

Sizing Up the Competition

It's a busy world out there, with plenty of other folks vying for space in solo seven and in comic and specialty shops for your action figure dollar. What does McFarlane think of the other guys? Coping with his head and chest his from-the-hip views on the competition.

BATMAN: LEGIONS OF THE DARK KNIGHT [CLONER] "I'm really impressed with what they've done with Batman as a whole, and in terms of the separation they have within their different lines. With [Legends], they got big, but they could've taken it to another level. Once you get big, you've got to put more detail on it."

STAR TREK [PLANETJETS] "If I had that line, it wouldn't be so loyal to the direct interpretation of each character. I'd take a little bit of artistic license, and from the neck down, I'd make them visually interesting, rather than worrying whether the Tricorder looked exactly the same."

STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE [KENNER] "Man, I wish I had their sales. You're dealing with a phenomenon there. There's nothing you can really say about that line. Whether it's the best or worst thing out there, the brand name is so strong, it's going to work no matter what. That line is bulletproof."

MARVEL COMICS HEROES [TOY BIZ] "The only thing that bothers me about the Toy Biz stuff is its inconsistency. Each figure is created by a different production team, and each team isn't going to play the exact same way. You can't keep a consistent look throughout all the figures. They do have some brilliant figures that I've seen and wished I'd made, though."

CHAOS! TOYS [MOORE ACTION COLLECTIBLES] "They look good and are really detailed, but the Chaos! line is going to be the watershed mark for a lot of these smaller companies that are all trying to dump one or two figures on the market. If Chaos! can get their figures out and make it, it bodes well for these smaller guys. If they can't cut it, the smaller guys don't have a prayer." ■ MB

Across all your lines, one unifying theme is the "monstrous" aspect of all the toys. Why has that been your dominant approach?

The grown-up version is that I have a fascination about the darker side of the world, because it's something that we're never going to see. I'm never going to be in a back alley at 3 a.m. with drug addicts...or monsters. There's a rubberneck feeling—you'll never be there, but you might want to look at it.

The simpler version is that when I was a kid, I used to like "Frankenstein" and "Dracula" and "Abbott and Costello Meet the Mummy" and all those cheesy B-movies, like "The Blob." It's consistent today—I still like the same things: monsters, the scary little bogeymen and things that go bump in the night. It's not a commentary on society at all, it's just what I like.

Your fascination with monsters and grotesque toys has brought some heat from conservative parent groups. The self-appointed guardian of righteousness, Rev. Rose, staged a very public protest of one of your figures in particular, the Freak. warning parents not to buy this "evil toy." Has this kind of notoriety had much of an impact on you or the company?

No, not really. You just live with it. Once you decide that you're not going to try and please every single person on the planet, then you have to be prepared for criticism. Between what I did with Spider-Man at Marvel Comics, Image and Spawn, I'm used to being in the eye of controversy. I've got thick skin. I don't really care that people that I'm not aiming Spawn toward don't get it.

I listen far more to the ones who collect my toys. Those are the people that I stop and listen to—they're my audience. Those are the people I'm trying to get. I'll listen to their frustrations and concerns, and get feedback from them. But if some mom and a minister in Duluth don't like my toys, the reason is that it's not for them. It's as simple as that.

Along those lines, do you still run into problems with the age factor on your toys? Have any parents been upset with their graphic nature?

My packaging now says, "Ages 13 and up." Does that mean a 10-year-old kid can't handle my toy? A 5-year-old can handle my toy. The warning label is just there so that if somebody has a heart attack over the HBO animated series or the "Spawn" movie, and accuses me of trying to peddle my toys to 5-year-olds, I can point to the age limit on my package. The toys are still fun for 5-year-olds, but basically, I just put that label there for the tight-asses of the world.

The real answer is that the only way a child can get a toy in his hands is if somebody puts it there. I've yet to see a 5-year-old kid that can hold down a steady job, have a car or get to Toys R Us by himself. The 5-year-old kid isn't getting the toy against Mom's will. The only something's appropriate for her, like the "Spawn" movie, which she even plays a part in, she doesn't watch it. I am the adult, she is the child. I make the decisions for my children.

Let's change directions a little. Your Cy-Gor came out first as a toy, then appeared in the Spawn comic book. Are we going to see more of this kind of cross-pollination between the toys and your comic book titles?

Yeah, but it's not going to be extreme. If you've been paying attention, I'm a slow burner. Most of what I do is Spawn. I'm kind of a one-trick pony in that way. Will there be other things like Cy-Gor that translate from the toy to the comic books? Yes. But if I make 100 figures a year, I might only take one or two of those for the comic. Will one of the characters from Total Chaos make an appearance way that a 5-year-old kid can get that toy in his hands is if Mom and Dad get in their car with their money from their jobs, and drive to the store and buy that toy.

Just a small sampling of the wild creatures to emerge from McFarlane's imagination.

If you don't want your 5-year-old kid having these toys, then don't buy them. It's as simple as that. I've got a 6-year-old child, and if I don't think in Spawn? The answer is yes. But it's only going to be the cool ones and characters that fit the comic. I never want the tail to wag the dog. I never want to put a character in a comic book just to sell more toys. Will he make a good character in the comic? Is he visually interesting, and will he help the comic book? If the answers are yes, I go ahead and do it.

Designing for Todd

So what's making figures for Todd McFarlane like, anyway? What does he want to see in his action figures? What doesn't he want to see? To get the answers, we tracked down Ed Frank, co-president of McFarlane Toys, to reveal the Top Five guidelines on working for the main man.

5. There's no such thing as too much detail.
"Todd loves all the detail we can get on the figure," Frank says. "The more we can squeeze in, the better it is with Todd."

4. The more articulation, the better.
"Articulation is another big thing with us," Frank says. "We try to get as much in as we possibly and functionally can."

3. Monsters, monsters, monsters!
"Todd loves monsters," Frank admits. "It's easy—very easy—to sell the idea of monsters to Todd."

2. Think "cool."
"Overall, what we try to do is make a cool figure," Frank says. "That's what Todd wants most of all: for the figure to look cool and be really well-designed. We would rather start extravagant and scale it back than start small and hope it will somehow come out looking cool."

And the No. 1 rule at McFarlane Toys:

1. Money doesn't matter.
"At least in the design stage, that's what Todd always reminds us of," Frank says. "It does become important when we start looking at production, but as we're designing, we've all been told to go wild and do whatever we want."

Is there anything the designers wouldn't do? It took some prying, but Frank finally fessed up. "We joke about it a lot, but one thing we wouldn't do is make a figure of someone we mutually dislike and disfigure him or make him a victim in some way," Frank admitted. "Beyond that, the sky's the limit. We've had decapitated heads as accessories, bloody body parts, and characters disfigured in just about every way possible. Basically, the only rule put down by Todd as far as what we design is that there are no rules." ■ AMB

It's pretty well-known that you have final say on all your toys, and that you're fairly strict about what goes out the door. How does that work with the McFarlane Toys designers in New Jersey and you in Arizona?

The way it works is that we send videotapes back and forth, and watch them together while we're on the phone. We also fax drawings while we're on the phone. Theoretically, it's as close as you can get to having a satellite without spending that kind of money.

So do I see everything that goes out the door? Yeah, sure I do. If I don't, somebody's in trouble. It's my name on the company. Do I design every single thing that comes out of my company? No, because the reason I left Marvel Comics was because I didn't like being told what to do all the time. Even though I'm an artist who has a right to say how I think things should look with the character and idea that I've designed, I need to juggle that with getting these other people going, so that everything they create is consistent and you feel like a team with the end product.

Do I get most of the glory for it when it's all said and done? Yeah. Unfortunately, that's just a reality of the world, but I've got a lot of good people behind me that are tapped into the way I like stuff. They've heard the lectures a hundred times, and they've started to think a little bit like me. But even better, they have some answers that I don't, and they surprise me sometimes, which is just great.

So basically, the design team knows your standards and works within those parameters?

Right. For example, when I looked at my action figure prototypes in the clay stage two years ago, I would've made 20 changes on a figure. Today, I'm probably down to making three. My designers have figured out the point where they know what I like—and what I don't like. We're all on the same page, pretty much, and it makes things go a lot easier.

"If some mom and a minister in Duluth don't like my toys, the reason is that it's not for them. It's as simple as that."

Are there any other new lines of figures in the works, or will future figures all fit into the Spawn, Total Chaos, Todd McFarlane's Monsters or KISS lines?

We're going to do an extension on the Monster line, and we're going to do a line of Spawn toys based on the idea of the monster toys: We're basically going to take a couple of scenes from the "Spawn" movie and recreate them in dioramas. The next line of Spawn for 1998 is a little bit of an extension of this "manga" feel that we're doing right now for Spawn Series 9.

The only one that we've got on the back burner that we're doing is a "Wacky Racers" kind of style. [Editor's Note: Based on the Big Daddy Roth-inspired Aurora hot rod models of the 1960s.] I'd like to do a line so the car looks really cool and all the detail is there, but the figures in the cars are really wicked. Something that you'll see and say, "That's how they should've been making those toys!" That's one that we've been playing with for seven or eight months.

What does the future look like for McFarlane Toys?

A little bit of diversity within the action market. I don't see myself getting away from the action figure aisle for too long, because we're in the action figure business. You're not going to see Spawn bikes, and you're not going to see diversification in terms of coloring books or electronic games or any of that stuff. We might do some radio-controlled toys, but it would all still be based on the figures. What we want to do is come up with those kinds of new ideas, so we become a trailblazer again, not a follower of what's already been done.

Our goal when we first started was for McFarlane Toys to be the king of aisle seven—the action figure aisle. Once I'm the king of aisle seven, then I'll worry about making something that belongs in aisle eight. TF

Girl Power!

THE EVOLUTION OF THE FEMALE ACTION FIGURE

By Tom Root · Photographs by Paul Schiraldi

You've come a long way, baby!

After decades of hanging a "No Girls Allowed" sign outside the Action Figure Clubhouse, boys' toy lines are featuring female characters like never before. Where previous action figure assortments would include one female character at most, or often exclude them altogether, recent lines have embraced these toys enthusiastically. After years of backing away from female characters as bad business risks—gathering dust on toy racks while their male counterparts rang up big sales—toy companies are seeing profit potential in female action figures.

Not only are female figures finding mainstream success, but in the emerging direct sales toy market, populated by small toy companies, female characters dominate. Toys based on independent comics with "bad girl" main characters like Warrior Nun Areala, Lady Death and Hellina bypassed toy stores altogether and met with great response from collectors in comic and hobby stores this year.

No two ways about it, female action figures are suddenly big business in every market, whether it's the large toy retailer, the local comic store or the greasy fat guy hawking $20 Harley Quinns at conventions. It's a spectacular turnaround from an industry long resistant to female characters.

Forget The Past

In the 1960s, when action figures first began to climb their way to the top of the toy box, female characters were few and far between. Trying to win over a boys' market long unresponsive to "dolls," toy companies were wary of including female characters in lines targeted at boys.

And with good reason. According to John Bonavita, author of "Mego Action Figure Toys," the first attempts at female action figures all sold terribly. "In the '60s, all the female figures kind of bombed out," Bonavita says. For example, Marx's Best of the West 11-inch action figure line, launched in 1965, included cowgirls Jane and Josie West. "It was a complete bomb," Bonavita notes. Also in 1965, Honey West (no relation), based on the popular TV femme crime-buster, debuted as an 11-inch doll (lecherously packaged as a "Private Eye-Full") with loads of accessories. Diagnosis? "Bomb," Bonavita says.

The first real breakthrough for female characters came in 1967, when Hasbro's mega-popular G.I. Joe line introduced its G.I. Nurse Action Girl. Fully articulated with scads of extras, the G.I. Nurse Action Girl was an integral part of the G.I. Joe play pattern. However, despite being ready for action in the rough-and-tumble battlefield, selling points like "Comb and brush her rooted hair!" on the G.I. Nurse's packaging seemed targeted more toward girls than the boys who played with Joe.

The G.I. Nurse was a huge failure, Bonavita says, because of exactly that kind of split marketing. He points to Comic Heroines, a 1967 line by Ideal also known as Super Queens, as another example. "They lost a ton of money on them," he says. "Boys didn't buy them because they thought they were too girlish—and girls just didn't buy them." This line, which included Batgirl, Aquaman's consort Mera, Supergirl and Wonder Woman, is extremely rare and commands thousands of dollars today—an ironic turn given its initial response.

When it came to action figures, the Mego Corp. dominated the 1970s. But in every line the toy giant launched—from Planet of the Apes to World's Greatest Super-Heroes! to the Dukes of Hazzard—Mego's female characters crashed and burned.

Bonavita says even before the days of short-packing figures to build collector interest, Mego would ship fewer female figures. "The number of females in the assortment was very low," he says. "It was done before it was a marketing thing." Instead, Mego's shipping ratio was simply a case of consumer demand—which was practically zero. "All the female Megos sold poorly," he says. "You'd go to the toy store and see 20 Uhuras sitting there" from the Star Trek line.

But Mego never gave up on female figures, no matter how poorly they performed in stores. Capturing the interest of girls was always a goal. "Mego always tried to include females where it was possible," Bonavita says. "They always tried to appeal to girls but never succeeded," at least not in toys aimed at boys. "The only success Mego had was the 12-inch Wonder Woman line, because that wasn't marketed for boys. It was found in the Barbie aisle." The company's good fortune with Wonder Woman spurred even grander schemes at one point. "Mego was considering competing with Barbie," Bonavita says, but the plan never saw fruition, and the Wonder Woman line remains the company's only success with female characters.

Kenner's Bionic Woman line was another one of the few other female figure successes of the 1970s. "The Bionic Woman did very, very well," Bonavita says. "It also appealed to boys." Boys could play with the Bionic Woman and not feel like they were playing with a girl's doll, he says.

In 1977, Star Wars exploded into stores, and boys everywhere greeted the advancing fleet of 3 3/4-inch figures with open arms. Lonely of Princess Leia Organa received a cold reception, however—boys simply didn't want her. The market was still so segmented that in 1979 Kenner offered its 12-inch Princess Leia to stores separately from her male counterparts. While Han, Luke and Vader did some male bonding in the action figure aisle, Leia was shuttled off to the girls' aisle, armed with a comb instead of a blaster. The ploy was unsuccessful, and the 12-inch Leia flopped.

Through the 1980s, however, female action figures slowly began finding a toehold in the boys' market. A decade that began with racks and racks of unwanted Dukes of Hazzard Daisy Duke figures slowly gave way to toy lines featuring female figures boys actually wanted. Lines like Hasbro's relaunched 3 3/4-inch G.I. Joe included female characters like Scarlett, Cover Girl, the Baroness and Lady Jaye—just as vital to the play scheme as the males, a trend which continued to strengthen as years passed.

Girl Figures Go Mainstream

The 1990s have seen the production of female action figures in unprecedented numbers. In the past few years, the majority of new action figure lines from principal toymakers have included at least one female figure. Suddenly, female characters sell, and the sales boost seems directly linked to how female characters have changed over the years.

Jesse Falcon, Toy Biz product manager, thinks the surge in female figures' popularity can be linked to a stronger, more action-oriented presence in boys' entertainment. "It's the roles that the women have been perceived as taking," Falcon says. When the first Toy Biz X-Men line shipped, "Storm just sat on the shelves and didn't sell," he says. Stores like Toys R Us complained about Storm's utter non-performance, Falcon says, and made their lack of enthusiasm about female figures known to toy companies.

When the Saturday-morning "X-Men" animated series debuted on Fox in 1992, attitudes toward poor Storm changed. "Once the show came out," Falcon says, "kids bought up walls of Storm figures." The initial Storm figure, once a toy store pariah, became one of the most-desired X-Men toys to date.

According to Falcon, the difference was the strong, take-charge, rough-and-tumble attitude of the female characters on "X-Men." Half the X-team was comprised of women, and they were just as action-oriented as the male team members. Suddenly, boys were viewing female action figures in a new light. "I credit a great deal of that to the X-Men," Falcon says. "They changed perceptions of toymakers and the people behind children's programming." Female characters were no longer the listless duds of boys' action lines.

Sarah Dyer, creator of Slave Labor Graphics' Action Girl Comics and keeper of Action Girl's Guide to Female Figures (<http://users.aol.com/sarahdyer/index.htm>), concurs. "Guys play in scenarios, girls play in roles," Dyer says. "Guys needed the girl figures if they wanted to 'play X-Men.'" Dyer says the same play pattern held true for Hasbro's G.I. Joe line in the 1980s. "The G.I. Joe girl figures always sold well," she says.

Not only did boys respond well to the female characters in the X-Men line, but girls did too, Dyer says. Once "X-Men" started airing, "I saw girls in the action figure aisle looking for Jubilee and Storm," she says.

But what really led girls into what had once been strictly boys' territory, according to Dyer, was another '90s TV phenomenon: "Mighty Morphin Power Rangers." "Because of 'Power Rangers,' girls really started going down the action figure aisle," Dyer says. "I started seeing girls walking around with Pink Rangers."

Falcon agrees more girls are making their way into the boys' action aisle. "Action figures are a pop buzz, it's cool," he says. "Girls don't want to be left out."

The growth of the market for female characters is leaving its stamp on nearly every major toy line. This year, Playmates added a major female character to its long-running Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles line—a fellow butt-stompin', martial-arts masterin' amphibian named Venus de Milo. Venus is part of a new look for the Turtles, who've been revamped as 18-year-old, slightly grittier incarnations of their former adolescent selves. "Part of growing up is having female company," says Tanya Luchs, assistant product manager at Playmates. Venus is not a kid sister or a tagalong, Luchs is quick to point out—she's an equal to the boy turtles in every way.

Playmates' other big seller, Star Trek, has included a large ratio of female figures throughout the life of the line. "Star Trek is the hardest toy license to read," says Chris Overly, Playmates' product and brand manager for the Star Trek line. Overly says unlike most action figure lines, the Star Trek line is based 80 percent on collector demand. "The collector market dictates our assortments," he says, the complete opposite of the more kid-based lines.

Playmates has had mixed success with female figures over the years, and has short-packed some of its females, although not on a consistent basis. Vina, the Orion Animal Woman, sold very well, Overly says, pointing out one of the Star Trek line's female successes. Some figures have been complete dogs, however—Lwaxana Troi bombed, as did Ensign Seska from the Star Trek: Voyager line. "Seska was still on shelves, even six to seven months later," Overly says.

Collectors Weigh In

A driving force behind the sudden popularity of female action figures is their desirability among collectors. In the past few years, "Collectors really started getting into female figures," Dyer says. "They realized the first April [from Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles] is worth a lot of money."

"A lot of people started basing their collections on female figures," Overly says. "It's an easy way of collecting every assortment, all lines, all licenses. Collectors created a little niche without having to collect every figure in a line—just the females."

Overly points to improved figure design as another driving force behind the sudden collectibility of female figures, specifically on McFarlane Toys' Angela figure. "It really kicked off the trend," he says. With her sexier sculpt and detailed design, Angela made the perfect starting figure for collectors, Overly says—a spectacular piece on which to build a collection.

Direct market girls like Hellina and Warrior Nun Areala have found the success which eluded female Megalos like Invisible Girl.

Female figures were often shipped in lower quantities, a common toy marketing practice called "Short the chick," Overly says. It soon became a good bet that the female figures in a toy line were the most scarce, and thus more valuable.

Short-packing female figures focused attention on them in the collectors' market, Luchs says. "Shorting them in the assortments built excitement about their collectibility," she says. "Now, they're easier to get," but collectors continue their habits of buying up female characters, she says.

Chet Jacques, McFarlane Toys Collectors' Club director, also points to short-packing as having built collector interest in female figures. "We had three female figures in a row that bombed tremendously," Jacques says. "Cosmic Angela, Mother-One and She-Spawn. They just died. The She-Spawn figure was sculpted beautifully; we just couldn't figure out what was going on."

After being thrice burned, McFarlane Toys stopped shipping its female figures in equal amounts to its other figures, and began including fewer females per case. The play worked; desirability increased, and Jacques says the female figures are now once again evenly packed in each assortment, although the company is still "a trifle leery."

Jacques says female figures will continue to do well with collectors, who have now made it standard practice to pursue them. "Lots of people realize less female characters are made into figures, therefore 'rare' female figures will always have their own little niche," Jacques points to Mallory from Mattel's Mighty Ducks line as an example of the lengths collectors take the Female Rule. "Collectors want her, even though she's not necessarily a sexy figure." Speak for yourself, Chet!

Bad Girls' Toys

Antarctic Press president and Warrior Nun Areala creator Ben Dunn says the ability to distribute toys through the direct market, as opposed to toy store chains, has helped open the door for female action figures. "In the direct market, the buyers are older and prefer female characters," Dunn says. The willingness of smaller companies to produce female characters stems from the resistance large toy companies have shown in the past to female figures, Dunn theorizes—it's a way smaller companies can stand out.

Antarctic's Warrior Nun action figure led the independent companies' bad-girl charge into the marketplace earlier this year. Although action figures are planned for indy-press characters like Mike Allred's Madman and Trent Kaniuga's CreeD, most of the direct sales focus remains on female figures. "We plan on doing male figures later on down the line," Dunn says, but in the near future, Antarctic plans on nothing but female characters: Shotgun Mary, an anime-version Warrior Nun, Warrior Nun villain Lillith and Gold Digger's Cheetah.

Figures based on the title character of Lightning Comics' Hellina debuted earlier this year from the company's Skybolt Toyz arm—and quickly sold 19,000 units, roughly double the comic's average print run. Steve Zyskowski, Lightning publisher and Skybolt's vice president of marketing, says the decision of small companies to produce female action figures merely reflects the popularity of independent publishers' female characters. "I think it's the condition of the marketplace," Zyskowski says, citing the success of independent comics like Shi and Lady Death, both of which center on female lead characters—characters which will soon be produced as toys. Among serious toy collectors, Zyskowski says, female figures always do well anyway—and he cites the novelty of the smaller toy companies' racier designs. "Collectors look at the Hellina figure and say, 'This is unlike any toy I've seen at Toys R Us!'" he says. "Larger companies like Toy Biz and McFarlane have to produce to a certain conformity for the mainstream market."

Characters like Lady Death are riding the wave of collector interest in female figures.

Changing Attitudes

While excitement over direct market figures is currently running high, and buoying interest in female figures, some warn that the direct market is not yet a proven commodity, and interest in their wares might prove fleeting. "It's going to be a miracle if the direct market figures don't crash and burn in the next year," Dyer says. "They're flooding the market." Dyer is also unconvinced that the push behind direct market toys is coming from toy enthusiasts, and not the small toy companies themselves. "I think companies don't want to face the fact that this is a vanity thing," she says.

In other words, independent comic companies might be pushing their figures whether or not demand exists from the toy-buying public, which could result in a surplus of unsold figures. And that could spell doom for the direct sales market—and female specialty figures along with it.

And while female characters have made great strides in the past few years, whether or not their mainstream numbers will increase, level off or diminish is difficult to forecast. "It will depend on television," Dyer says. "There's still not many active roles for females."

However, Luchs thinks interest in female characters is here to stay. Attitudes toward action figures are changing, which bodes well for a variety of characters, females included, she says. "Action figures are turning into more of an art." Innovations in sculpting and detailing have made action figures desirable to older age groups, she says. It's this new audience which could keep interest in female figures high.

According to Overly, female figures could stay popular simply because they are action figures. "There's a very positive trend in action figures in general," he says. "Whenever that genre grows, so do the microcosms within it."

Also, Luchs sums up, "In this day and age, it's easier to accept a female hero." Another sign that female action figures could be here to stay.

A PACKAGE IN FINE OR VERY GOOD CONDITION HAS MULTIPLE, VERY NOTICEABLE DEFECTS, LIKE EXCESSIVE TEARS, STAINS, MARKINGS AND MIGHT EVEN BE OPEN. THESE GO FOR AROUND 25%-50% OF GUIDE, SOMETIMES EVEN LESS IF THE PACKAGE IS TOTALLY SHREDDED.

IF DOOM IS TO STRIKE, THE TIME IS NOW.

THIS FIGURE IS MINT WITH ALL OF HIS ACCESSORIES AND ACTION FEATURES INTACT. ACCESSORIES ARE THE LITTLE GADGETS A TOY COMES WITH, LIKE SWORDS, CAPES, GUNS, ETC. ACTION FEATURES ARE THINGS LIKE LIGHT-UP EYES, PUNCHING MECHANISMS AND STUFF. THESE MINT FIGURES ARE WORTH 125%-150% OF GUIDE.

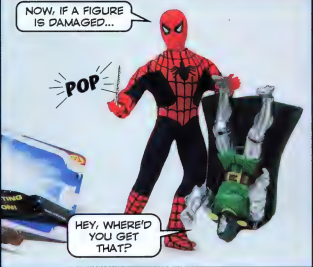

IF A FIGURE IS INTACT WITH ALL ITS GOODIES, BUT HAS A MINOR SCRATCH OR SMUDGE, IT'S WORTH ABOUT 100% OF GUIDE. NOW, A FIGURE MISSING ITS ACCESSORY...HERE, GIMME THAT.

A TOY MISSING ITS ACCESSORY OR WITH AN ACTION FEATURE THAT NO LONGER WORKS IS WORTH ABOUT 75%-80% OF GUIDE, SOMETIMES EVEN LESS.

NOW, IF A FIGURE IS DAMAGED...

A TOY WITH HEAVY DAMAGE LIKE SCRATCHING, MARKINGS OR WOBBLY-LOOSE JOINTS IS FINE TO VERY GOOD, DEPENDING ON THE SEVERITY OF THE DAMAGE. THESE TOYS FETCH ANYWHERE BETWEEN 15%-50% OF GUIDE, DEPENDING HOW MESSED UP THEY ARE.

A LOOK
FIGURES FROM YEARS PAST

INDIANA JONES

ALL ROADS LEAD TO STAR WARS.

Or at least the history of action figures in the late 1970s and early '80s might seem that way. In 1978, George Lucas sued Universal Pictures over the similarity of "Battestar Galactica" to his own "Star Wars." The next year, Mego picked up the toy license for "Star Trek: The Motion Picture," hoping for a piece of the science fiction cash cow. And in 1981, eager to capitalize on his success with "The Empire Strikes Back," Lucas teamed with auteur Steven Spielberg to create the first in a trilogy of Indiana Jones movies. "Raiders of the Lost Ark" would cement Spielberg's reputation as a blockbuster director, and also mark the beginning of his lifelong interest in action figures.

When "Raiders" opened in 1981 it was so successful that Paramount's stock shot up that same day. Strong as their individual reputations had been, Lucas and Spielberg were now at the top of the industry. Spielberg in particular found he had more clout than he'd ever had...and he used that power to make action figures.

Spielberg had believed in the positive power of merchandising for some time. During the filming of "Jaws," he had insisted that Universal promote a toy line centered around the monstrous shark featured in the movie. This was 1975, three years before "Star Wars" would prove how much money there was to be made in toy licensing. But Universal declined out of concern the shark would have been too frightening for kids. (Ironically, Ideal—a board game maker—did release a Jaws game for children in 1975.)

With "Raiders," Spielberg wasn't going to let the studios make the same mistake twice. His contract specified that merchandising, especially action figures, had to be made available to Indy fans, and his take would be 10 percent of the profits. Spielberg made this a standing policy on all of his subsequent adventure films, including "Jurassic Park," where he made $16 million from toy sales alone.

Kenner released the first series of 3 3/4-inch Indiana Jones action figures in 1982, with the second assortment following a year later. There were four figures in Series One and five in Series Two, all of them major characters, with no significant omissions. The highlights included two Indy figures, one in his trademark fedora and leather jacket, the other in a Nazi soldier's uniform. Indy's on-again-off-again lover, Marion Ravenwood, is the second most valuable figure in the line, behind the villainous Belloq in Ceremonial Robe, a mail-in premium of the film's dastardly archaeologist nemesis. There were also three playsets, one 12-inch Indy doll, and an Arabian horse which was remade from Kenner's 1979 Butch and Sundance line of figures.

But if there's one cardinal rule in the action figure biz, it's that creatures sell—and often the strangest, the creepiest and the scariest command kids' interest. That's why the most obscure Kenner Star Wars aliens are the hardest to find. Unfortunately, Raiders had no Darth Vader, no Amanaman, no Jabba the Hutt. So in 1983, Kenner was forced to cancel the Indiana Jones line due to poor sales.

In 1984, Indy returned to the big screen in the "Raiders" prequel "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom." Spielberg had no desire to direct the film, but did so only because he had promised Lucas he would make three Indy movies. When "Temple of Doom" was finished, Spielberg couldn't make the same push for toys he did for "Raiders." The movie—with its darker tones of child slavery and torture—was, as he put it, "too intense for children under 12." In the end, the now-defunct toy company LJN released a mere three figures, available for such a short time that they've become highly collectible. LJN had plans to make two more figures (including Short Round) plus a Mine Car Playset, but none of these made it past the prototype stage.

Star Toys, another small manufacturer, snagged the license in Europe and released the final three Indiana Jones figures in 1987, all of Indy himself. One figure was clad in a German uniform, while the other two were shirtless and identical except that one contained a rubber snake, the other a rubber alligator. Unimpressive as these figures were, all are actively sought by collectors because they were unavailable in the U.S.

Spielberg has said he made "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" in 1989 to "apologize to my fans for making the second one." And while "Last Crusade" may have been easier on kids than its predecessor, no action figures were produced. Indy appeared on the small screen from 1992 to 1996 in "The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles," but these historical shows emphasized brains over brawn, and no action figures were ever created.

Currently, it's been 10 years since the last Indy figures were manufactured and eight years since the last movie. It's well-known in Hollywood that Spielberg, Lucas and actor Harrison Ford have discussed a fourth Indy adventure. Word is that it will be produced by the year 2000, and chances are good for a new series of action figures, given the overwhelming collector interest.

And if Indy rides again, he might not have to borrow Butch Cassidy's horse this time. TF

CRAFTING YOUR OWN HOMEMADE ACTION FIGURES

KNIFE AND LIMB

By Chris Spaseff

Hello, creative customizers! By now, you should have most of the tools and materials you will need and your stripped figure in front of you. It's time to work on the arms and legs as we continue to customize. Your figure might still be in pieces if you need to add some extra detail, but whenever you think it's time to glue your figure back together, just refer to last month's article.

STEP #1: ARMED AND DANGEROUS

Look at your reference materials (pictures of your character from comics and whatnot) and focus on what is happening with your figure's arms. You might have to add muscle, armor or possibly tentacles, and you need to decide what modeling material you're going to use. Super Sculpey is probably the easiest thing to use but can be very fragile and break off easily. Milliput will always be a little bit harder to sculpt but is several times more durable. I usually use Super Sculpey if there's a lot of detail (excessive wrinkles or etching) and Milliput to bind separate pieces together. Milliput is also best to use if the piece might break off.

Ingredients

These are the supplies you'll need for this month's installment. If it's not available at your local hobby or craft store, we've noted another source.

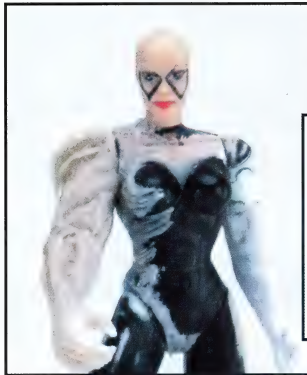

1. X-Acto handle with #11 blades
2. Rotary dremel tool and assorted bits (hardware store)
3. Sandpaper in various grits: 80, 100, 150 (hardware store)
4. Sanding block (home improvement or beauty supply store)
5. Milliput or A/B epoxy
6. Super Sculpey
7. Cyanoacrylate instant glue
8. Accelerator for glue
9. Dental tools
10. 16-gauge galvanized wire (hardware store)
11. 28-gauge beading wire (hardware store)
12. Robot Super Hinge Points (hardware store)
13. Safety goggles (hardware store)
14. Heat gun or hair dryer (hardware store)

Why you should listen to Chris... Reason #3:

He built this Future
Ash figure from a
Slinky and two sticks of margarine.

I can't tell you the best way to sculpt your details, because they'll be different on each figure, and it takes a lot of practice to get good at working with these materials. I can, however, give you some basic steps. No matter what you're adding—gloves, biceps, whatever—the process is basically the same.

If you're using Super Sculpey, start by kneading it until it's soft and pliable. This will make it easier to both apply and sculpt. Apply some to the figure's arms, noting where extra material is needed, and work the material on the arm, feathering the Sculpey. With your dental tools, sculpt the material into its finished form.

This might take a couple tries if it's your first time, so if you're not happy with the results, simply remove the material and start again. Sometimes it helps to wet your tools and hands with a little water to ease your sculpting. Work slowly to make sure you don't ruin an area you've finished with your hands or tools. Every so often, move the figure's arms back and forth to make sure you still have full movement of the joints.

After you have completed an area, you can heat-set the Sculpey using a hair dryer. I've also found that a heat gun works better and faster than a hair dryer. Mine has two settings, and I use the lower one to keep from scorching the figure. The hair dryer will take quite a while and the heat gun will only take a few minutes, so always keep the gun moving. The heat gun gets quite hot and will burn and melt your figure if you leave the heat in one place too long.

If you are using Milliput, cut off an equal amount of each stick, following the instructions on the box, and knead thoroughly. You will have to use water on your hands and tools because it is quite sticky when mixing and applying. Using the same basic technique as with Super Sculpey; apply the material to your figure and start sculpting. After you have the sculpting done, you'll need to set the figure aside while the Milliput hardens. This is an overnight wait unless the heat gun or hair dryer are used to speed up the process. NOTE: Don't get the Milliput too hot, as it will bubble and weaken, and possibly not harden correctly!

I think it's easier to start by getting the muscles or the preliminary build-up completed first, and then come back with more material to finish the sculpting or add features such as gloves, spikes or other details. We'll do specific details in a later issue; right now, it's glove time!

To make the simplest glove, just build up the area around the wrist and feather the material toward the hand. If the glove is like Captain America's big honkin' flappy ones, just apply the extra material coming off the glove and sculpt it into the wrist area.

STEP #2: WIRE SERVICE

For a more complex hand or glove, you might have to start from scratch and create a skeleton out of your 16-gauge wire. Take five lengths of wire (or however many fingers your character has) and cut them to the length of your character's fingers or appendages. Wrap them together with a longer piece, which will form the forearm. The length of this wire will depend on the length of your character's arms, but it never hurts to have it longer so it's easier to handle. Use some 28-gauge beading wire or any thin, pliable wire (you can even use garbage bag ties with the paper or plastic covering removed) to wrap all the pieces together.

Apply a coating of cyanoacrylate to the beading wire and give it a light spray of accelerator. Take the fingers and bend them to the desired hand pose; for instance, a claw shape or a pose to hold a gun. I recommend Milliput for the application, since it will be stronger, but again, Super Sculpey works too. Apply your modeling material over the armature (the wire hand you just made) and sculpt your character's hands using your sculpting tools. It might be easier to work on each finger individually, then apply more modeling material over the rest of the hand and transition the fingers into the palm. To attach your new hands, drill a hole the same diameter as the 16-gauge wire into the arm of your figure and glue it in. Continue the transitioning from the hand into the forearm or wrist.

If you need to make a brand spankin' new arm and still want an elbow joint, you can buy hinges at model airplane or hobby stores. I use a product called Robart Super Hinge Points. It will take quite a bit of work to transition the joint so it will still work properly, but it can be done. Just grab a spare figure lying around with a moveable joint and notice how the pieces work with each other. This will probably take you several trial and error attempts to get it to work smoothly.

Starting with a wire skeleton is essential when creating new hands and/or arms.

Forming a simple cuff gives the impression of a boot.

You could probably create a figure from scratch using these hinges, your wire skeleton and some of the neat hardware available at model airplane or hobby stores.

STEP #3: GET A LEG UP

You can follow a lot of the instructions above for arms and gloves to create your custom legs or boots. But a little more care will be needed when you apply your modeling material because the legs obviously need to support the character and still be poseable, unless you plan to make a static figure.

Also pay particular attention to where the legs meet the torso to make sure the legs can still have their full range of movement. When sculpting the feet it can be advantageous to place the character standing on your work area. This way the bottom of the feet or boots will be on the same plane as the original figure's feet.

Boots can be as simple as adding a thin coating of modeling material to bulk up the legs. Cuffs and flares from the boots involve forming some Sculpey or Milliput around the ankle or calf, depending on your finished character.

Obviously, some of these instructions won't work with figures like Star Wars or G.I. Joe because of their small size. Your only option with some of these figures is to find hands, arms, legs and/or feet from another figure to merge with your figure. For additional strength, sometimes a piece of 16-gauge wire can be used between the two pieces to reinforce the joint.

Next month is October and that can only mean one thing: Halloween! That spells horror, so I'm taking you all on a little side trip to discuss the blood and guts of making some horrific figures. Stock up on your red paint! TF

HOMEMADE HEROES

THE GINCHIEST FAN-MADE ACTION FIGURES

SPONSORED BY HANGER 18

Didja ever wish Toy Biz or Kenner would make that one comic book character you've always wanted as an action figure? Looking for an Aunt May or Blink figure? Howzabout Nightwing or Impulse? Well, don't get frustrated. Be a self-starter and make them yourself! When you're done constructing those heroes (or villains) missing from your collection, send some photographs of them to ToyFare and we just might print 'em and send you all sorts of swanky stuff. Our winners this month will get prizes from those swell folks at Hanger 18. Each runner-up will snag three figures from the She-Force 2 assortment, which includes Dazzler, Wolfsbane, Marvel Girl, Tigra and Miss Marvel, while our grand prize winner will take home the entire She-Force 2 assortment!

IMPRESSED? YOU SHOULD BE! NOW GET CRACKIN' AND SEND US YOUR 'HOMEMADE HEROES'!

GOLDEN AGE DC HEROES

Mark Keach, Carmichael, Calif.

Mark scores points not only for making a whole mess of Golden Age DC characters, including various members of the Justice Society and Freedom Fighters, but for getting all the costume details just right. Here's the lowdown on how he did it: The whole gang was made from various Mego figures, including Captain Kirk for Starman, Flash, Spectre and Wildcat; the Wicked Witch from Wizard of Oz for Hawkgirl; and Starsky from Starsky and Hutch for the Atom. Mark also paid close attention to details by using a spring for the body of Red Tornado II and repainted Micro Machines Mighty Morphin Power Rangers for Dollman and Dollgirl. Way to go, Mark!

BATGIRL

Greg Cox, Clinton, Miss.

Taking a cue from last year's Robin and Batgirl Thrillkiller painted mini-series by Howard Chaykin and Dan Brereton, Greg made this "Elseworlds" version of Batgirl. Before it was sanded down and painted over, this figure was just a McFarlane Toys Cosmic Angela, with a big orange utility belt to add that extra finishing touch.

GRAND PRIZE WINNER

ADAM WEST AS BATMAN

Marc Erickson, Sioux City, Iowa
Holy Customization, Batman!

Comic illustrator Marc Erickson (By Bizarre Hands and stories in Negative Burn) has come up with one of the Batman variations on which Kenner seems to have missed out. Inspired by the classic live-action "Batman" TV show, Erickson sculpted this dead-on likeness of actor Adam West, who portrayed the Caped Crusader in the '60s.

He started with a Worf figure from Playmates' Star Trek: The Next Generation line and applied several coats of paint with an airbrush. The hardest part of the figure, Erickson claims, was making the head look just right. "Getting the scale was rough. The head I used was actually the fourth one I made. I wouldn't stand for anything that wasn't Adam West so I kept resculpting until I got it right."

The head was made entirely from Super Sculpey, although Erickson used the original Worf head as reference. "I made a negative mold of Worf's face in some Sculpey and then pressed more Sculpey into that to get the proportions just right. It was a shortcut, but I still had to sculpt most of it to get Adam West's features."

But why use the notoriously campy "Batman" series as inspiration? "I just loved it when I was a kid," Erickson recalls. In fact, in the future he hopes to find time to make Burt Ward, Yvonne Craig and other members of the "Batman" cast. And after that, he might even tackle other superhero TV shows from his youth, like "Wonder Woman," "The Incredible Hulk" and "The Shazam/Isis Hour."

Even though he wants to customize more figures, Erickson doesn't plan to turn his back on comics just yet. "I always thought it would be fun to make action figures as a career, but I like drawing too much." TF

HEY!

If you're really serious about making "Homemade Heroes," check out the swell bonus "Homemade Heroes" contest on page 66, with your chance to win all Kinds of Kurt Busiek's Astro City booty by sculptin' up your favorite Astro City hero or heroine!

HOW DO YOU ENTER?

Easy as A-B-C. Make your favorite comic, movie or sci-fi character out of old action figures, modeling clay or raw clams. Take a few color, in-focus photos of your creation. (NO POLAROIDs, YOU NINNIES!) If you decide to go that extra mile and make a package for your figure, please send photos of the figure both in and out of packaging. To the back of EACH photo, attach a list of what you made your figure(s) from, as well as your name, full address and phone number. When you're all done, send it off to:

HOMAGE STUDIOS PRESENTS:

THE ASTRO CITY "HOMEMADE HEROES"

CONTEST

Hey, we all know that Kurt Busiek's Astro City is one of the coolest mags around. Heck, it's got everything—Alex Ross, fantastic characters, enticing stories, Alex Ross—but the one thing it doesn't have yet is toys! So ToyFare's taking it upon ourselves to get the ball rollin'!

What you do:

You know the "Homemade Heroes" drill! Basically, we want you to customize your very own action figure and create your own Astro City character! Y'know, make a homemade Confessor, Mr. Bridwell (y'know, that alien bug-guy), Hangman or even the whole flamin' Honor Guard! Just remember, take multiple shots of your toys from different angles, pose 'em in cool positions and, if you design packaging for them, photograph them both in AND out of your package. (And for the love of God, no Polaroids!!)

Grand Prize (1): One grand prize winner will receive a set of the new Astro City series (#1-#9) autographed by Kurt Busiek, Brent Anderson and Alex Ross, and the Astro City hardcover (reprinting the original series #1-#6) also signed by these three amigos! To boot, you'll get an Astro City T-shirt and Astro City pin, both by Graphitti Designs!

Second Prize (4): Four second prize winners will each receive a copy of the Astro City trade paperback (reprinting the original series #1-#6) autographed by Busiek, Anderson and Ross, and an Astro City T-shirt and Astro City pin, both by Graphitti Designs!

Legal City

No purchase necessary. Contest is open to anyone except employees of Wizard Press, Homage Studios, their immediate families and Kurt Busiek. You...you killed the Confessor! He was the coolest new character designed in years and you offered 'im! Man, you're lucky we're such huge fans of yours or we'd come lookin' for a lot more than lunch money! Print your name, date of birth, address, city, state, zip and telephone number with area code on the official entry form or a 3-by-5-inch index card, and attach the form or card to your entry. Enter as many times as you like. Mail each entry separately to: Astro City "Homemade Heroes" Contest, c/o Wizard Press, P.O. Box 118, Congers, NY 10920-0118. As cool as the Confessor was... "Alzar Boy"? C'mon, that kid's just beginn' for a shoe-tip arena. No mechanical reproductions of completed forms are accepted, but you can photocopy the entry form before filling it out if you don't want to mess up your magazine. All entries become property of Wizard Press and none will be returned. All taxes (federal, state and local, if any) will be the responsibility of the prize winners. No cash equivalent or substitute prizes will be offered. Prizes are awarded in the names of the contest winners and are not transferable. All entries may see print in future Wizard Press publications. Offer void where prohibited, regulated or restricted by law in a manner inconsistent with the purposes and rules hereof. Entries must be received at contest headquarters by October 31, 1997. Wizard Press is not responsible for lost, late, misdirected or mutilated entries. Odds of winning will be determined by the number of valid entries received prior to the closing date of the contest. Prize winners will be selected based on originality and creativity from among all properly completed entries by Wizard Press. Winning entries will be selected on or about November 14, 1997.

For a list of winners, available after November 14, 1997, send a self-addressed stamped envelope to: Astro City "Homemade Heroes" Winners List, c/o Wizard Press, P.O. Box 118, Congers, NY 10920-0118.

Top 10 Hottest Action Figures

BY CONTACTING HUNDREDS OF RETAILERS THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY, TOYFARE KEEPS A CLOSE EYE ON THE COUNTRY'S HOTTEST COLLECTIBLE ACTION FIGURES. AND, WELL, HERE THEY ARE...

1. GENE SIMMONS (KISS)

Before we get knee-deep in some wacky KISS trivia, here's why—out of the four KISS toys—Gene is the hottest. In a nutshell, he's the band member with the highest profile, he's the most popular and he's had sex with Cher. Now, ya ready for KISS trivia? Yeah? Gene used to be a schoolteacher in New York. The first time he tried that fire-breathing trick during a show, he set his hair on fire, didn't know it and some roadies had to jump onstage and put him out with a blanket. He was also the villain in the Tom Selleck flick "Runaway" and was killed by evil robot spiders at the end.

How's that?

2. PAUL STANLEY (KISS)

Paul's No. 2 placement in a nutshell: He's the lead singer; other than Gene, he's the only member who's been with the band since the beginning; and he's got a neat cleft in his chin. Now for the KISS facts: Paul's real name is Stanley Eisen. His original makeup was all white with a black circle around his eye; he liked it but the other members made fun of him and said he looked like Petey the dog from "The Little Rascals," so he changed it. He's got more chest hair than Gene Simmons. Cher also had sex with Richie Sambora.

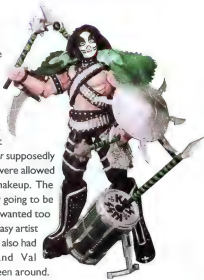

3. ACE FREHLEY (KISS)

In a nutshell: Ace had a modestly successful solo career, was part of the band Frehley's Comet and had a Top 40 hit with "Rocket Ride." Fun facts: While touring, Ace got liquored up and Krazy-glued all the furniture in his hotel room to the ceiling. His real name is Paul Frehley. Once, while running onstage, Ace tripped, grabbed a railing, completed a circuit and almost electrocuted himself. He's the ugliest member of KISS. Cher also had sex with Sonny Bono.

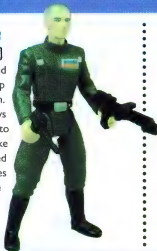

4. PETER CRISS (KISS)

In a nutshell: he's the fourth most popular member in a four-man band. His toy's the fourth most popular in a four-toy set. Go figure. Facts, facts, facts: back when the band was just hitting it big, the music magazine Hit Parade supposedly tricked KISS by telling them they were allowed to take a photo without their makeup. The "Destroyer" album was originally going to be painted by Frank Frazetta, but he wanted too much dough so the band used fantasy artist Ken Kelly instead. Oh yeah, Cher also had sex with Greg Allman...and Val Kilmer...and...aw hell, she's been around.

5. GRAND MOFF TARKIN (STAR WARS: POTF)

The pros and cons of being Grand Moff Tarkin. Pro: You get to blow up cool stuff like the planet Alderaan. Con: You get blown up by cool guys like Luke Skywalker. Pro: You get to boss Darth Vader around and make him do stuff. Con: You get bossed around by the Emperor who makes you do...stuff. Pro: You get to see Carrie Fisher jiggle around in her ill-fitting white outfit in person. Con: You're dead.

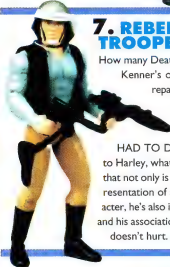

6. HARLEY QUINN (BATMAN: D.U.O. FORCE)

Hoo-hah! A figure that fans have been clamoring for years, the only figure of any kind based on the character, Harley's part of a line that focuses on one of the most popular and recognizable characters on the planet (Batman) and...she's just a damn cool figure! Just goes to show that if Kenner makes some GOOD action figures based on DC characters OTHER than Batman and Superman, they just might sell.

7. REBEL FLEET TROOPER (STAR WARS: POTF)

How many Death Squad Commanders from Kenner's original Star Wars line were repainted to make the Rebel Fleet Troopers who were so conspicuously absent from that line? HOW MANY HAD TO DIE? HUH??! Anyway, similar to Harley, what fuels this guy's popularity is that not only is he the first action figure representation of any kind based on this character, he's also incredibly sculpted. Well, that and his association to the words "Star Wars" doesn't hurt.

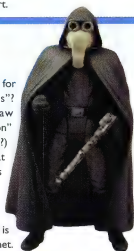

8. PONDA BABA (STAR WARS: POTF)

Remember the original Star Wars "Walrusman" figure? Dear God, that thing was an abomination! It had a bright orange smock/vest thing. It had flippers for feet. It had a head the size of a pea. And it looked more like the figure had swallowed a naked midgit who had his ass hanging out of Ponda's mouth rather than appearing to have giant "tusky" teeth. And while this may not be the first "Walrusman" figure, Ponda's superb sculpting makes it a highly sought-after toy.

9. GARINDAN (STAR WARS: POTF)

Who gets to make up all the names for the cool aliens from "Star Wars"? Garindan? Ponda Baba? Momaw Nadon? (Hey, say "Momaw Nadon" three times fast out loud. Fun, huh?) Aside from the funky name, what keeps this guy cooking on the charts is the same old, same old: He's the only Garindan figure of any kind, the sculpting kicks giant monster ass and he's part of a toy line that is the most popular thing on the planet.

10. ADMIRAL ACKBAR (STAR WARS: POTF)

He's a lobster-red fish guy in a white jumpsuit and he's got great big Cookie Monster muppet eyes. Barring that, this here figure is the best Ackbar toy ever made (cool sunken collar, man!) and, as part of the Star Wars toy license, is selling so well that you just have to pause, consider how George Lucas is worth 2.5 billion dollars and think, "Hey...that's a lot of %$#@ing money!"

Castaway

FROM THE ISLAND OF MISFIT TOYS

STEEL

HIS CRIME: Looking like he was hit in the head with a pan just as he was crossing his eyes. C'mon, it's bad enough that he looks like some weird supporting cast member of "Pee-wee's Playhouse" when he's not wearing his armor, but when you put the stuff on, he's cross-eyed! Ugh. Somebody get the Doomsday figure to come kick this guy's ass. But, in his defense, as hokey and cheesy as the "Steel" flick was, his movie was a dozen times better than that festering pile of dog vomit "Batman and Robin." So hey, all's not lost.

Kiss Up

By Lars Pearson

One of the most-hyped toy events of 1997 has McFarlane Toys KISSing the almighty greenback.

Fact: The newest action figure line based on KISS, the mega-popular rock band, is the first such offering in 19 years. Fact: The group's garish Kabuki makeup and costumes make them ideal for adaptation into action figures. Fact: The band has an enormous following that is arguably second only to the Beatles. Fact: The toys debuted in America in July, and were an instant hit in many regions.

But...there is a small danger here. Although the KISS toys were almost guaranteed to be blockbusters, McFarlane Toys has to tread a fine line between supply and demand. If the company boosts output too much, KISS toys could be sitting on the shelves. Collectors become nonchalant if they see oodles of figures gathering dust. But if a figure is TOO hot, consumers can lose their frenzy to grab an actively desired toy.

On the other hand, KISS variants are already in the works, which could add to the mad fever to get 'em. The first wave of KISS toys had plastic stands (each depicting a different "KISS" letter) that slowed production too much, so in August, McFarlane's new KISS wave will have album facsimiles based on the gang's "solo" records of the '70s. For a time, figures with stands will be in the vast majority, but as production continues, replacement offerings with albums will dominate. Also, McFarlane has already started swapping photos on the packaging. Mug shots of KISS performers will soon be replaced by photos of the singers holding their respective toys, and since McFarlane's already making the stand/album switch, there's likely to be a lot of variants. Completists in the crowd are going to want every possible variant...leading to more KISS sales.

LITTLE JUSTICE!

For those crying in their beer over the discontinuation of the Batman: Total Justice line, there will be some justice.

Kenner has agreed to release—albeit in limited quantities—the final four T) characters: Parallax (former Green Lantern Hal Jordan), Green Arrow, Black Lightning and the Huntress. Limited distribution is typical at the end of a series' run, since companies hope to make some money off the expensive molds they've crafted, but don't want to go all-out on a line they expect to be lukewarm at best.

But fans are already getting rabid for the final batch, since anything limited is hot right now. There are two primary reasons for this—completism (some fans want every Total Justice figure no matter what it takes) and greed. Yes, raw, naked greed. The kind that says, "This rare figure will be worth a gazillion bucks a few months from now and help finance my college education and Hanson CDs." Total Justice should be no exception.

SPAWNING PUBLICITY

Right now, the best thing that could have happened to Todd McFarlane's Spawn-Guy is the "Spawn" movie hitting the big screen. McFarlane's demonic creation is riding a huge, frothy publicity wave that's putting thoughts of Spawn in the minds of wallet-wielding consumers. Every major U.S. newspaper carried ads for the film, and the media is doing everything from interviews with "Spawn" actors to documentaries of how the movie and HBO "Spawn" cartoon series were made.

Unlike comics, which don't always benefit from movie adaptations, every drop of publicity seems to fuel the McFarlane Toys machine. The "Spawn" movie-based toys are doing well, especially the three Spawn variants (Spawn, Hamburger Head Spawn and Spiked Spawn).

And a note for bloodsucking speculators: McFarlane Toys reports that the Gore figures from the Total Chaos line are the rarest figures they've ever done. And even those are gathering dust, so grab 'em while you can.

UNSTOPPABLE FORCE

The wild success of Kenner's Star Wars: Power of the Force still hasn't slacked and the hottest items still fall into two camps: figures that have never been done before and exclusive premiums. Grand Moff Tarkin and the Rebel Fleet Trooper are among the hottest never-beens, and the B'omarr Monk Internet exclusive could rocket in price once it's out.

Free advice: As with the Luke Skywalker Jedi Knight Theater Edition freebie and Frito-Lay's "Spirit of Obi-Wan" Kenobi, there'll be a few indifferent people at first you can scam a Monk off for...oh, let's say around $20 or so. Once dealers buy up that same supply, however, they might start significantly hiking the Monk to make coin. In short: If you're thinking about getting one, get it damn quick.

TF

Wizard Press Price Guide Manager Lars Pearson can't wait until McFarlane wises up and makes a Vinnie Vincent KISS figure. Man, that Vinnie sure could make his axe sing!

ToyFare PRICE GUIDE

The toys in this guide are priced as follows: Prices listed on the left are for mint in package (MIP), meaning that the figures have never been removed from their original packaging; items not in any packaging (loose) or missing any of their original accessories very significantly and are generally worth the prices listed on the right. A listing marked with a  means that particular figure has not been released yet from the manufacturer. In some cases, these figures are canceled, and thus, never released.

Remember, this is only a guide, and prices can vary for a variety of reasons, including local scarcity.

BIG SHOT

MODOK, RED TORNADO AND DR. FATE Super Powers Collection (Kenner)/Iron Man (Toy Biz)

Here's a helpful collecting suggestion: be on the lookout for figures that are the only toy representations of their comic book or movie counterpart. It's pretty unlikely that guys like Red Tornado, Dr. Fate, Modok, Kid Flash, Swamp or even Fin Fang Foom will ever be the subject of more than one action figure and therefore won't experience any market-cooling. These guys may be second-string characters, but they all have their own sense of cool. Well...all of them except maybe for poor Dr. Fate. He's just silly.

ZEFRAM COCHRANE & CAPT. PICARD IN 21ST CENTURY CIVILIAN OUTFIT

Star Trek First Contact/S.T.: First Contact Collector Ser. (Playmates)

There's an unwritten rule that when it comes to Star Trek movies, all the even-numbered ones are good and the odd-numbered ones are crap. Think about it. "First Contact," the eighth in the series and the first to focus entirely on the Next Generation crew, pulled in $92 million and was able to revitalize the Star Trek movie franchise. What does all this mean to toy collectors? Well, it pretty much guarantees there will continue to be all sorts of Trek merchandise, including Playmates' popular action figures.

BARON ZEMO

MARVEL SUPER HEROES SECRET WARS (MATTTEL)

FIRST APPEARANCE: As Phoenix—

December 1973 as Baron Zemo—Captain America #276 (December 1982)

ORIGIN: In an attempt to avenge his father's death, Helmut Zemo, as the Phoenix, captured Captain America and chained him over a vat of adhesive X, a powerful bonding agent. Zemo accidentally fell into the vat, however, and was believed dead. In reality, he survived but his face was ruined. Covering himself in a crimson mask, he took the name Baron Zemo and vowed revenge on Captain America as an independent agent and leader of the Masters of Evil.

CURRENT STATUS: Baron Zemo is now Citizen X, leader of the Thunderbolts, the Marvel Universe's newest team of "heroes."

BEST STORY: Captain America #275-#279. Zemo conceals an elaborate scheme to destroy Cap's life.

BIG SHOT

MS. MARVEL & MS. MARVEL UNIVERSE

Marvel Hall of Fame (Series 2; She-Force)/(Series 6; She-Force II) (Toy Biz)

Toy Biz's Ms. Marvel Universe figure was based on Captain Marvel's old buddy Carol Danvers, who was the first superheroine to take the name Ms. Marvel back in the '70s. However, the Biz's Ms. Marvel figure is actually the second character to call herself by that popular moniker. To see, when the new Ms. Marvel came around, in her orange and yellow costume, the original Ms. Marvel had changed into the cosmic adventurer Binary. So, to avoid confusion the Carol Danvers figure was dubbed Ms. Marvel Universe. Confused yet?

CH'OD

X-MEN (TOT BIZ)

FIRST APPEARANCE: X-Men #107

ORIGIN: The alien warrior Ch'od is an amphibious Sasar from the planet Tiaru. He became one of the space-faring pirates called the Starjammers when Christopher Summers (father of Cyclops and Havok) was held captive in the Shier slave pits. Joined by the feline-like Hepzibah and the cybernaut Razor, the foursome escaped the slave pits and stole a spaceship they named the Starjammers. As a group, the Starjammers have plundered the Shi'r Empire and helped the former Maestro Ultron and the X-Men on several occasions.

CURRENT STATUS: Ch'od and the Starjammers were last seen fighting an invading force of the alien Unctored.

TEST STUFF: X-Men Spotlight on Starjammers #1-2. The Starjammers go on a quest to find the mysterious Phoenix.

BIG SHOT

SPAWN III & WARRIOR NUN AREALA

Warrior Nun Arealia (Antarctic Press)/Spawn (Series 7) (McFarlane Toys)

A comic book and action figure modeled after a sword-wielding nun is just askin' for attention. That's what Antarctic Press, the company behind Warrior Nun Arealia, has found out—Arealia has been popping up in newspapers across the country. "Actually, most of the articles we've seen have been pretty fair and objective," says Warrior Nun creator Benn Dunn. "Whenever you do anything concerning nuns and the church, you're bound to get some opinions, but anybody who reads the comics will come to the conclusion that it's pretty harmless."

BATMAN: TOTAL JUSTICE (KENNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Justice League of America #1 (October/November 1960)
ORIGIN: A purple-skinned alien from the planet Kallor, Despero was the last survivor of a race of powerful telepaths. He ruled the planet with an iron fist until he left for Earth in pursuit of J'onn, a scientist with the means to destroy him. J'onn and the JLA defeated Despero, although he fought the team on several subsequent occasions. He assumed his current shape, hunking form when he immersed himself in Kallor's Fire of Pytar, a sacred pyre of nuclear flame.
CURRENT STATUS: Despero was under the mental control of the robot L-El and became a member of the defunct Justice League Task Force.
BEST STORY: Justice League America #38-40, Despero returns to Earth and brutally attacks the JLA.

CAPTAIN AMERICA

Marvel Universe (10-inch Deluxe Figures) (Toy Biz)

If you were a national icon like Captain America, you'd demand respect. But when he appeared in the Spider-Man Electro Spark line, he sported a wimpy sparking shield. And when Toy Biz recently made a 10-inch version of the Star-Spangled Avenger, they left off his distinctive cuffed boots! What's going on here? "That one wasn't made from scratch," explains Toy Biz product manager Jesse Falcon. "The body that was available didn't have the boot detail Cap has. It's one of those decisions that was made out of cost."

BIG SHOT

ROBOCOP AND CENTAUR

RoboCop (Toy Island)/Hercules: The Legendary Journeys (Toy Biz)

Back in 1987, "RoboCop" was a surprise box-office hit, and Kenner produced a short-lived toy line just in time for the inevitable sequel. Unfortunately, "RoboCop 2" didn't do big business (despite a script by comic book fan-fave Frank Miller), so the license was later picked up by the small Toy Island company in 1994. A RoboCop TV series was in syndication at the time, so the line included TV characters like Commander Cash and Pudface. Alas, the show soon vanished from the airwaves, and so did any plans for RoboCop's toy future.

EL SEED

THE TICK (BANDAI)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "The Tick" episode "The Tick vs. El Seed" ORIGIN: When plants get picked on, El Seed is there to strike back for them. An evil animated sunflower, El Seed's ultimate goal is to liberate all plant life from human oppression, and he can control plants and bring them to life with his vegetation vitalizer potion. El Seed is accompanied by the Bee Twins, two women dressed in bee costumes who do all his dirty work, and he also frequently creates plant monsters, including strangling vines and buzz saw plants, to help him in his evil schemes. CURRENT STATUS: Check out "The Tick" animated series on Comedy Central. BEST STORY: "Bleemoid." In this episode, El Seed attempts to steal the 400 Year Bloom and turn it into a bad seed.

KHAN CLASSIC STAR TREK MOVIE SERIES (PLAYMATES)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "Star Trek" episode "Space Seed" (February 15, 1967)

ORIGIN: Khan Noonien Singh, the subject of genetic experiments, became dictator of one quarter of the Earth and threw the planet into the Eugenics Wars. He was eventually overthrown and escaped on the ship Botany Bay with several of his followers. His ship drifted in space for 200 years until it was located by the starship Enterprise. Khan and his crew attempted to take over the Enterprise, but they were thwarted and allowed to settle on the planet Ceti Alpha V.

CURRENT STATUS: Khan and his followers were seemingly destroyed when the Genesis device detonated. BEST STORY: "Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan." This Trek movie finds Khan exacting his revenge on Captain Kirk and the crew of the Enterprise.

BIG SHOT

ICEMAN & SPIDER-MAN

X-Men: Mutant Armor/Spider-Man: Web Traps (Toy Biz)

With his dynamic pose and etched-in webs, it looks like the recent Web Traps Spider-Man is Toy Biz's best Spidey in a long time. While it would seem that this figure cost a pretty penny to produce, Toy Biz guru Jesse Falcon explained the figure was actually their most cost-effective Spidey. "With a Spider-Man figure, there are so many spray applications to get all the webs, so it turns out to be cheaper to etch them in and do a paint wipe. It picks up more detail and we can get the webbing a lot tighter."

CAPTURE NET SUPERMAN & JOKER

Superman Animated Series/Batman Animated Series (Kenner)

When WB's animated Superman series was put on hold, Kenner also put the brakes on its line of action figures. The line featured several different Superman figs, as well as Brainiac and Lex Luthor. Plans called for future assortments to include TV show guest-stars Flash, Supergirl, Metalo and Darkseid, but these figures have yet to materialize. With the series being relaunched this fall with new episodes of "Batman," as part of "The New Batman/Superman Adventures," could this mean a second wind for Superman toys? Only time will tell...

MAXX

SPAWN SERIES 4 (MAGNIFICENT TOYS)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Comic

Primer #15 (1993)

ORIGIN: Julie Winters created a world in her childhood mind called the Outback that was protected by a rabbit, her spirit animal. When she grew older, it became a chaotic place after she was attacked and raped. Julie inadvertently projected her spirit animal onto a bun she can over, mistaking him for her attacker. She covered him in some trash, including a purple lampshade from the Outback. The lampshade created a bond between dimensions and metamorphosed into a purple costume, changing the bun into the bizarre Maxx.

CURRENT STATUS: Check out the Maxx in Sam Kitch's regular Maxx comic.

BEST STORY: The Maxx #19-22. The threads of the Maxx's origin come together as he realizes who he really is.

NICK FURY & BATMAN

Spider-Man (Toy Biz)/Batman Animated Series (Kenner)

First it was Michael Knight on "Knight Rider." Then came Mitch Buccion on "Baywatch." Now David Hasselhoff's bringing Marvel's cigar-chompin', eyepatch wearin' tough guy to the small screen. That's right, KIT's of bad is taking on Nick Fury in a new made-for-TV movie for Fox TV. The scary part is that there's really good word-of-mouth on this thing! As long as the opening credits don't have Fury and Dum Dum Dugan running hand-in-hand down the beach in slow motion, it'll be fine by us.

OPTIMUS PRIME TRANSFORMERS (HASBRO)

FIRST APPEARANCE. Transformers #1 (Sept. 1984)
ORIGIN. In his honorific of Cybertron, Optimus Prime, leader of the Autobots, was given the Creation Matrix, a program that could install life into non-sentient machines. Optimus led a mission into space to prevent Cybertron from being abandoned by an asteroid field, but they were attacked by Megatron and the Decepticons. Their ships crashed on Earth, lying dormant for 4 million years until Optimus and the other Autobots awoke and continued their battle with the Decepticons.

CURRENT STATUS. The latest incarnation of the Transformers in the computer-generated TV series "Transformers: Beast Wars," which features a big monkey named Optimus Primal.

BEST STORY. "Transformers: The Movie." Optimus Prime and Megatron duke it out in this feature film.

BIG SHOT

PROBE DROID & CROWD CONTROL STORMTROOPER Star Wars P.O.T.F. II (Deluxe Figures) (Kenner)

After releasing such non-movie fare as Crowd Control Stormtrooper, Kenner's line of Deluxe Star Wars figures has changed its focus to include accessories faithful to the celluloid incarnation of Star Wars. Recent releases like the Imperial Probe Droid and Hoth Rebel Soldier with Anti-Vehicle Laser Gun have revitalized interest in Kenner's Deluxe line. Fans are torn: some like the playability of the initial Deluxe figures, while hard-core collectors admire the movie-inspired fare. Keep watching the toy aisle to see what Kenner's got planned next.

MUG SHOT

POLARIS

X-MEN (TOY BIZ)

FIRST APPEARANCE: X-Men #49 (October 1968)

ORIGIN: Laura Dine, an infant with green hair and latent mutant powers, was adopted by her mother's sister when her parents died in a plane crash. Her powers did not manifest until, as an adult, she became involved in a scheme cooked up by the Machinists, who hired the villain Mesmero and created a robotic duplicate of Magneto to lead an army of mutants.

Mesmero kidnapped Dine and evoked her latent magnetic powers, but she was eventually freed from his control. She has battled alongside the X-Men as Polaris and become a member of X-Factor. CURRENT STATUS: Polaris is currently a member of X-Factor.

BEST STORY: Mesmero X-Men #239. Polaris faces an onslaught by the Marauders and is possessed by the mind-controlling Malice.

BIG SHOT

DAZZLER

Marvel Hall of Fame (Series 6; She-Force II) (Toy Biz)

This Dazzler figure is just a repaint of a Black Cat head on an Invisible Woman body, but where did her rollerskates come from? That's simple: they're repainted accessories from Jubilee. Actually, the big question isn't where the skates come from, it's who the hell thought up Dazzler's stupid lookin' costume. Disco was long dead back in 1980 when she first appeared, and she didn't get new threads until right before her series got canceled in '86. Sequins and roller skates? Go choke on a disco ball, you loser.

HIT! APPEARANCE: Lengsath
#1 (September 1985)
ORIGIN: Spiral is a genetically engineered slave created by the otherdimensional dictator, Mojo. Spiral was ordered to capture Lengsath, another slave who engineered a massive revolt and fled to Earth. Using various magical spells, this air-minded sorceress can teleport between dimensions and summon powers. Spiral has spent time recently on Earth, where she is a member of the government Freedom Force and purveyor of "The Body Shoppe," where she transformed Lady Deathstrike into a cyborg.
CURRENT STATUS: X-Men ally. Spiral was just seen retooling Karna's brother and sister in the Body Shoppe.
BEST STORY: New Mutants Annual #2. The New Mutants travel to Majoworld and run into Spiral.

BIG SHOT

SAMURAI AND BATMAN

Super Powers Collection/Batman Animated Series (Kenner)

After taking care of DC icons in its first year and Jack Kirby's Fourth World in the next, Kenner's Super Powers Collection began using characters from outside DC Comics territory. Why'd they do figures of lame-ass characters like Samurai, Golden Pharaoh and Cyclotron instead of recognizable icons like Batgirl and Nightwing? Well, they figured that a character like Samurai was higher profile because of his appearances on the Super Friends cartoon. And what about Golden Pharaoh and Cyclotron? They not made just because of their nifty action mechanisms.

HE-MAN & HARLEY QUINN

Adventures of Batman and Robin (Kenner/Masters of the Universe (Mattel))

Why in the bejezous is Kenner's Harley Quinn figure so hot? Well, she's part of a wave of popularity for all female action figures (check out Girl Power! on page 38 for the full skinny). Ever since she first appeared on "Batman: The Animated Series," Harley's been an instant hit with fans and advance buzz had been building on her action figure for months. Add in the fact that Kenner did a first-class job on the sculpting of the Joker's gal pal, and you've got a recipe for one of the hottest action figures around.

USAGI YOJIMBO

TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES (PLAYMATES)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Abends #2 (November 1984)
ORIGIN: Usagi Yojimbo (which translates to "rabbit bodyguard") is a member of the samurai warrior clans in feudal Japan who values honor and loyalty above all else. His master died many years ago, so he is a ronin, a masterless samurai. Usagi believes a samurai should only serve one master in a lifetime, so he makes his living as a yojimbo, or bodyguard for hire, and ventures from job to job. Usagi is an excellent fighter and is proficient with a variety of weapons, especially the katana blade.
CURRENT STATUS: Check out the monthly Usagi Yojimbo comic series published by Dark Horse Comics.
BEST STORY: Usagi Yojimbo Color Special #2. To protect Lord Miyayuki, Usagi must uncover the secret of some mysterious paintings.

NO MORE
UNSIGHTLY
WETNESS!!

My personal favorite toy is the big blue Talking Tick action figure. It keeps me company on those many, many occasions when I can't quite manage to get my husband's attention. Our conversations often go like this:

"Should we watch some TV together, Tick?" I ask.

"KEEN!" he says.

"Uh-oh, the baby's crying," I say.

"NAUGHTY SPAWN, YOU FACE THE TICK!" he says.

"Needs his diaper changed," I say.

"OH, GROSS!" he says....like clockwork.

See? Very companionable. Almost like a person. That's why I love the Tick, whose devotion is much more easily captured than my husband's. Y'see, my spouse Norm is a collector. Ever heard that sad, sad story from a fellow wedded friend?

"Yeah, I used to be a collector. Then I got married and she made me get rid of everything."

I just couldn't bring myself to be the selfish cow who would say to Norm, "Now is the time to give up the hobbies—upon which you've spent your entire life—and devote yourself only to boring adult pursuits, because I say so."

Instead, I try to think of his comic book collection as $15,000 dollars of equity. Through this simple gesture, I discovered the secret of inspiring eternal devotion in a fanboy.

But that isn't even the end of the story, because my husband also collects toys. What's your idea of a fun night on the town? How about visiting Toys R Us every week on "Truck Day"? How many couples do this before they have any kids? Ahhh, romantic evenings strolling through the action figure aisles hand-in-hand, persuading the staff to crack open a new case of Legends of the Dark Knight figures! The Laughing Gas Joker figure from that line was short-packed at first, and Norm just HAD to get it. Isn't this how every bride dreams of spending her time with her spouse? Sigh

Maybe he'll get a clue when Kenner finally releases a Bruce Wayne action figure, complete with Dozen Roses and Smooching Action. Hmmm. How about the Anniversary Day Jonathan & Martha Kent Deluxe Superman set with Diamond Earrings Accessory? Sigh

On the other hand, being the love object of a toy collector has its unexpected great moments. Norm completely won my mother's heart during our courtship when he brought her a gift of collectible Dinosaur Transformers from McDonald's. She was mighty partial to the Tick wind-ups she got a while later, too. Yep, my hubby had found his ideal mother-in-law. Not surprisingly, he proposed shortly after that, perhaps sensing that he was not likely to find another family as eccentric as mine. I soon settled into my role as a mistress of the toy estate—we allocate the same amount of money for toys and comics that we do for food! And since Norm has the attention span of a mayfly, I just spend the rest of our money on whatever I want.

He never notices.

On the whole, I am pleased with the life of a toy wife. Where some young couples have tacky art from Sears, I have the Frank Miller Dark Knight Returns statue. And what's in the shadow boxes on my walls? No weird little Franklin Mint thimbles for me! Instead, I have Star Trek Micro Machines on display. Art is in the eye of the beholder, not in the minds of my bewildered relatives, after all. It pleases me that our home is filled with purchases inspired by passion and excitement, rather than stuff that someone thought was tasteful in a pallid kind of way. I'd rather have the William Paquet Swamp Thing collectible statue on my mantle over those wretched Lladro harlequins any day! Feh.

Now, with the birth of our son, we have entered a new stage of our lives.

"At last," cries Norm, "I finally have a reason to buy those Superman and Batman baby clothes I always see at Toys R Us! Woo-hoo!"

My husband and I must face a grave new predicament: Will we actually let Baby play with any of our toys?

GASP!

But that would mean taking them out of the package!
